RUSSIAN JEWS MASSACRED!

WHITNEY WRITES: 'COOK WAS FIRST'

America to-day gave a tremendously enthusiastic welcome home to both Dr. Frederick A. Cook and Commander Robert E. Peary, the rival claimants for the honor of first discovering the North Pole.

Almost simultaneously, at New York and at Sydney, C. B., the two explorers set foot again on American shores.

A notable incident in connection with the return to civilization of the Arctic heroes was the announcement to-day that Harry Whitney's sister had received a letter from him, in which he declared that Cook had been the first to reach the Pole.

The letter, after commenting on Dr. Cook's talk with the writer after the explorer's return from the Pole, makes this statement:

"Isn't it too bad that Commander Peary should have failed in being the first to get to the Pole after all these years and all his attempts?"

The Scandinavian-American liner Oscar II., which brought Dr. Cook from Copenhagen, steamed up New York Bay to Quarantine at daybreak, and proceeded up to the Battery, saluted by hundreds of tooting sirens from as many craft, gaily decked in flags and bunting.

At Sydney the Arctic steamer Roosevelt came into the harbor at almost the same hour, and amid a demonstration almost as noisy and vociferous.

The reunions between the explorers and their wives was affecting in the extreme in each instance.

WELCOMING HOST MOBS DR. COOK

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—Dr. Frederick A. Cook, the American explorer, who on September 1 electrified the world with the announcement that he had discovered the North Pole, came home to-day, welcomed by cheering multitudes and the blasts of sirens in the harbor. He appeared supremely happy, his homecoming marred only by the attack made upon him by Commander Robert E. Peary, his rival.

Dr. Cook defied his noted critic, declared that he had his proofs with him, and said he was willing to let the public judge, though deploring the controversy. He said he had brought his data on the steamer Oscar II., and that Harry Whitney had duplicates.

Cheered on Liner's Bridge.

New York greeted a different looking Arctic hero than the weather baten, dilapidated conqueror who sailed into Copenhagen, when the Oscar II., with flags flying and people cheering, steamed up by the bay this morning, surrounded by gaily bedecked tugs, tooting launches and conveying steamers.

The liner steamed into the harbord and dropped anchor at quarantine at sunrise, with Dr. Cook standing on the bridge smiling and waving response to the plaudits of his welcomers.

'I'M GOING, NORA,' LAST WORDS OF JOHNSON

ROCHESTER, Minn., Sept. 21.—"Well, Nora, I guess I'm going; we have made a brave fight."

These were the last words of John A. Johnson, Minnesota's beloved Governor, who died at 3:25 a. m. to-day in St. Mary's Hospital, following a surgical operation performed last Wednesday.

Governor Johnson was in a lethargic state during the greater part of the night, but occasionally was aroused, especially after coughing, and would then matter a few words to Mrs. Johnson.

At times he seemed to wish that the end might come, for on one occasion he said:

"My, the time drags slowly. I am so uncomfortable."

The Governor lapsed into unconsciousness at 1 o'clock. Toward the end he revived and raised himself several times to pat his wife on the cheek.

"I want to see Fred," he said at one time.

It was not known whether he meant his brother, Fred Johnson, who was not at the hospital, and who was unable to reach there before his brother's death, or Fred B. Lynch, Mr. Lynch was sent for, and the two had a short conversation. It lasted only a few minutes.

Physician Weeps Bitterly.

The announcement of the Governor's death was made by Dr. C. P. McNevin. "He died at 3:25," said Dr. McNevin. The physician was sobbing bitterly, tears rolling down his cheeks. He had been a close friend of Governor Johnson.

A few moments later the big bell of Central school in Rochester began to peal. Forty-eight strokes were tolled, one for each year of the Governor's life.

Besides Mrs. Johnson, Dr. W. J. and C. H. Mayo, Dr. McNevin, Nurses Jane and Schiffler, Mrs. John Sullivan and Miss Sullivan, were the words of life dicker and go out.

"He is gone," they said.

A flood of tears and sobs of agony, the faithful wife fell upon the inanimate clay which in life had been all in all to her.

ELEPHANTS ESCAPE; TERRORIZE CITY

SANTA BARBARA, Cal., Sept. 21.—Eight elephants belonging to a circus stampeded and invaded the residence part of the city. Fences were torn down, a porch demolished and scores of fruit trees uprooted by the animals before they were captured. The elephants were corralled in a vacant lot on the outskirts of the city. The keepers and other elephants are always to lead the animals back to captivity.

"TIM" COAKLEY HERE TO ATTEND WEDDING

Timothy Wilfred Coakley, for years prominent in politics and law in this city, but now a resident of Los Angeles, Cal., is in Boston with Mrs. Coakley on a week's visit. He expects to return to the Pacific Coast Saturday next. The Coakleys have come to Boston to be present at the wedding of Mrs. Coakley's sister next Wednesday.

TOWNS DESTROYED; 70 DEAD IN STORM

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—Natchez, a city of 15,000, has been partially destroyed by flood and fire following on the great storm, which has lashed the Southern Atlantic seaboard since last Sunday, and which now is causing havoc throughout the Mississippi delta, according to meagre and scattering messages from Southern points to-day.

Telegraphic communication has practically ceased with the lower coast States. What few reports are obtained are from interior cities, which have obtains dibets news from couriers or by roundabout telephoning. The New York Cotton Exchange this afternoon posted the following bulletin, which came as a private message to one of its members:

Natchez, Miss., has been half destroyed by flood and fire. Great damage from storm reported from northern Alabama.

At the Cotton Exchange it was said that efforts to get further information and met with failure and that probably the point from which the bulletin had been sent, supposedly somewhere in northern Alabama, had been cut off from communication soon after it was dispatched.

Damage Enormous.

Another message received in Wall street to-day said:

"Storm extending over entire Mississippi delta and into Arkansas. Damage is enormous."

Half the houses in Greenville, Mississippi, have been unroofed.

According to vague reports which have reached Augusta, Ga., to-day, at least seventy persons lost their lives in the storm.

The last wires between Aagusf and Flomaton, sixty miles away, went down at 5 a. m. to-day. The last message received was that another terrible storm was brewing. The wind was fifty miles an hour and in Mobile, many of the streets were flooded and filled with the debris from wrecked buildings.

Between Mobile and New Orleans a number of passenger trains filled with people are in grave danger. They were stalled by the flood which is rising fast.

Four Dead in New Orleans.

The hurricane belt extends for many miles inland. Severe damage was reported from Vicksburg and Jackson.

Four are dead in New Orleans and the property loss as a result of the hurricane will exceed $100,000. Many houses were unroofed and frail buildings in numerous instances were destroyed. All the wires are down.

The storm apparently moved inland to Southern Louisiana. The velocity of the wind at New Orleans was the highest in the history of the local weather bureau.

The Louisville and Nashville Railroad tracks for a distance of six miles southeast to Mobile, Ala., are under water.

VOTE AT PRIMARIES TAKES BIG SLUMP IN DEMOCRATIC RANKS

Boston's State primaries' vote to-day is the lightest in years. Estimates by the Election Commissioners place the total of to-day's vote at 42,000, about 10,000 less than the vote of a year ago. The Democrats cast about 37,000 votes in last year's State primaries. The Republicans cast about 15,000. The falling off on the Democratic side this year will be especially heavy.

Lack of interest in the contests, except in a few districts, early morning fog, and changes in the locations of polling places are the reasons for to-day's light vote. The voting booths which served as polling places last year have been abandoned in some districts and schoolhouse basements are being used instead. Many voters, finding no booth where they voted last year, made no effort to find the new polling place. This was the case especially with those who usually cast their ballots on their way to work.

The Fitzgerald-Loutsney machines in Wards 8 and 9 this afternoon sent out openly for William F. Murray, candidate for the Democratic Councillor nomination in the Third District, and against Lawrence H. Sullivan, his opponent. During the morning hours they worked quietly. Their action created a mil sensation among politicians this afternoon. The Fitzgerald's action caused a bigger surprise than that of the Loungsneyites. John F. Fitzgerald himself was supposed to be "on the fence" in this contest.

Leaders' Prophecies.

President James Donovan of the Democratic City Committee had this to say to-day: "Youll find in every district, when the votes are counted to-night, that the Democrats have nominated candidates and elected delegates who build up and do not tear down. To-day's primaries will help to build up and strengthen the Democrary and uphold its leadership."

Alderman James M. Curley, a leader of the anti-Donovan forces, said: "The results at to-day's primaries will rebuke the leaders whose motto is 'Rule or ruin.' I and my followers will never recognize Mr. Donovan's leadership."

Secretary Herman Horman Hormel of the Republican City Committee, said: "I prophesy victory for the regular Republicans and defeat for the insurgents in the ward committee contests, and in the various nomination contests."

Ward 19 furnished the first event that approached anyway near a sensation. Joseph J. Good, candidate for one of the Democratic House nominations from the ward, discovered early to-day that his name is not on the ward ballot. A "C. Q. D." sent to the election commissioners' office in the 104 Court House brought Commissioner Alphens Sanford post haste in a taxicab.

"Only way out of it," said Sanford to the election officers, "is for one of you to write Good's name on every ballot given to the voters." While Sanford was in Ward 19 word came from Ward 18 that Good's name was on the ballot in that ward. The mystery can't be explained.

The four Democratic candidates for the House nominations in Ward 18 threatened to-day to appeal to the Ballot Commission if they are defeated. They claim that Good's name on the ballot injures their chances.

Good himself insisted that he would do the same thing, if he is defeated in Ward 18.

Score Killed To-day—Women Chained Together and Scourged Naked Through the Streets—Children Scalded and Horrible Tortures Reported.

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 21.—An official dispatch received here to-day confirms the report that many persons have been killed and hundreds injured in the anti-Jewish outbreak at Kieff. Twenty were killed in to-day's fights alone.

The attack to-day came as the culmination of a series of outbreaks which started last Thursday while the Jews were celebrating their New Year. Of the hundreds of wounded many are hurt so badly that their death is merely a matter of hours.

Three Russians were killed by the Jews and a score injured in a great street fight when the opposing forces entrenched themselves in houses, firing from the windows. The lack of arms and ammunition gave the Jews scant show against their well-armed antagonists.

Hundreds of peasants, hired by the reactionary leaders, were armed and plied with drink until maddened. They led in the rioting and some of the details of the atrocities practced by them upon Jewish women and children are too terrible for print.

100 Women Tortured.

One hundred Jewish women were seized by the peasants, stripped of their clothing and chained together. Then they were led naked through the streets while the drunken rioters shouted curses and insults at them.

The husbands and sons of the women tried to defend them but they were beat on back. Two Jewish boys were so persistent that they were seized and roasted alive upon a bonfire. The peasants and soldiers sacked the houses of the Jews setting some of them on fire. What loot they did not carry away they piled into the street and set afire. It was upon one of these bonfires that the two Jewish boys were chained and slowly burned to death while the rioters danced about the fire shouting and screaming in a frenzy of bloody abandon.

A band of armed Jews tried to defend themselves. They were driven up against a stone wall and shot down like dogs. With knives the peasants dismembered their bodies, kicking the arms, legs and hands through the streets.

Thrown to Death From Roofs.

As the slaughter continued the Russians completely lost control of themselves and became savages. Drunk, their hands and clothing stained with blood of their victims, they fought among themselves over the division of their spoils. A number of Jewish women fled to roofs and were not found until the Russians began sacking their homes. The women, to avoid capture, poured boiling water upon the soldiers who tried to ascend to the roof. Finally their supply gave out and the soldiers gained the roofs, throwing the women headlong into the streets below.

One of the first acts of the mob was to rush upon the synagogue. The rabbi was conducting services, and the edifice was full of worshippers. Brandishing their rifles the burst into the temple, screaming blasphemous oaths. The rabbi was seized and dragged into the street where he was killed. The mob attacked the congregation and the floor of the house of worship was red with blood.

When the floor became too slippery for the butchers to continue belaboring the Jews they drove the congregation into the street and set the building on fire. Then the mob divided into smaller groups and set about their shameful work with some system. Almost every home was visited. Among the dead were a number of babies, some of them being torn from their mothers' breasts.

HUNTINGTON AVENUE GROUNDS, Sept. 21.—When the familiar figure of Uncle Cy Young strode out to the box this afternoon the assembled fans gave the veteran a great send-off. It was the last time this year that the old fellow was to step himself to his Boston friends. For this is the last trip of the year for the Cleveland team.

On the coaching lines was also the familiar form of Deacon Jim Maguire, a former manager of the Red Sox aggregation, and he, too, got a hand from the crowd.

Against Uncle Cyrus, who could be depended on to pitch his very prettiest, Manager Lake pitted the best the Boston club had in stock. It was a game that Lake wanted to win.

From a gloomy morning the skies cleared nicely and there was a good-sized crowd out to see what Old Cy could do to the Speed boys. The Naps have always been one of the most popular teams that ever came to Boston. They play the game as best they know and very seldom kick at a decision.

GIRL CATCHES A BOLD BURGLAR

Florence Fet, a fourteen-year-old girl, not only warned her father, Arthur W. Fox, that a burglar was in the cellar of his home at No. 32 Falmouth street, but she also telephoned to Station 16 while her father was overpowering the intruder.

When the girl heard some one moving about in the cellar she called down, thinking it might be her brother, when there was no reply she notified her father. He grappled with the man while they were rolling about in the dark. Florence telephoned the police, who, Mr. Fox holding down the burglar, later gave his name as Joseph L.

Mrs. Cook, her two children and one member of the Arctic Club had left pier A, at the Battery, at 6 o'clock, and sailed down the bay to quarantine in order to be the first to greet her husband.

The Grand Republic, which the Arctic Club had chartered, left later. In the welcoming party were Borough President Coler, Dr. Roswell O. Stebbins, chairman of the executive committee, and Captain B. S. Osborn, secretary of the Arctic Club; Dr. A. Schlitz, the family physician of the Cooks for many years; Joseph Vollkommer, J. J. Rogers and other friends of the Cooks.

Dr. Cook received his first American greeting half a mile off Quarantine from American News Service representatives on the special tug C. P. Raymond. Dr. Cook was seated

His first words were an expression of thanks to the American people and a defiance of Commander Robert E. Peary and his charges that the Brooklyn explorer had not discovered the North Pole.

When the C. P. Raymond drew short and gun of broadside. One of the reporters moved alongside the cigar H., as the tug using a megaphone, signalled the Capitola he seemed toward quarantine. Dr. Cook on the bridge and sent a message to the First Proof for Denmark.

"I will publish them first through the University of Copenhagen. I consider the faculty of that institution entitled to their first proofs," he answered.

"Will you not submit them to some university in the United States?"

"No. I feel bound to submit them to the University of Copenhagen first of all. Then I will send them to such other high class papers and everyone else."

Dr. Cook was then told of the messages from Commander Peary which denounced him as a "liar and crook."

Dr. Cook smiled broadly. He took his cap off and ran his fingers through his hair, while standing from the messengers who had suffered considerably from the shake up on the middle deck of the tender H.

He replied:

"In due time I shall pay my respects to Mr. Peary. I cannot understand his attitude. I have never disputed his claims of having been the second man at the North Pole.

Mr. Peary and I had been friends. Our friendship was of the most cordial kind for a number of years, and I know of no good reason why he should doubt my having reached the North Pole."

Pressed as to what he purposed doing in regard to the attack of Commander Peary, Dr. Cook said:

"Everything relating to this controversy with Mr. Peary must wait until I have my say. This I MUST HEAR THESE CHARGES FROM HIS OWN LIPS before I can make any reply. But where will he be when I do hear these charges!

"I believe Mr. Peary will make one of itself. I think that everything will turn out all right. My most anxious thought just now is about my wife and children. There is nothing in the world important to me. I have in my mind. And I hope when I get to my home I shall find them all well and unmolested with them for at least a few days."

Overjoyed to Return.

"I cannot sufficiently express my thanks for everything that has happened since I returned to civilization. I must express much gratitude and thanks to all the good people, officers, crew and passengers on this vessel. The Roosevelt is to me but little short of an overpowering joy.

"And I am overjoyed to get back to America. My feelings are beyond expression at that moment. You can imagine them coming back for the first time since June 21, 1902. I was anxious to put my feet once more on American soil and participate in tossing the pavements of dear old Broadway.

Dr. Cook was then asked to have a little fun at the photographers. He laughed a little, but good naturedly did as he was bidden to do. He shook hands all the time being snapped several times, a little four pronged tuft, hanging from his chin, which watched him with wide-eyed wonder. When he was informed that they were soon at land on board the tugboat John Chipperton, his face beamed and he ran to the side of the deck and began peering through the fog.

Just then the Chipperton popped up through the thick fog. Dr. Cook could not pick out his wife and children from those on board, and once the tugboat made fast on the deck of the Raymond, sidled like a substitute. Profit soon, however, began to assume definite shapes, and then Mrs. Cook and the children could be seen.

The explorer looked down at the little woman who had loved and trusted him so well. She had smiled unbelievingly when she read the reports that he was dead in the Arctic, who went for joy was the first dispatches that he had passed the Pole reached here, and when information for him when Peary questioned his veracity.

For several seconds he gazed at her, while disquieting fears regarding some his health. Then a color began to dot his cheeks. He called out his derby hat and waved it at his wife. She waved her handkerchief in reply. At the same moment the tugboat Chipperton blew a blast from its whistle. It was the typical language for "Glad to see you." Dr. Cook knew the whole of the first time in years.

Boards the Tugboat.

Dr. Cook then turned to Captain Hehir of the steamship. "I guess I'll go on the tugboat right away," he said. To captain grasped his hand. He did not Dr. Cook was to wipe it away a hurry to understood.

"All right, sir," he responded. And then he raised and swung in his hand to accept the proffered ladder. It had been understood that Cook was to board the steamboat Raymond Republic, but she was not in sight, and if it had been in sight Dr. Cook was not have boarded it. He had eyes for the tugboat, where his wife and children, Helen and Ruth, were.

No one not think about descending the to ladder, are you," the captain of the tug. "I," laughingly asked Dr. Cook, he said, but did not reply. In descending he quickly realized that it was a great piece of strategy. Sometimes he held almost by his arms like a sack of meal hanging on a trapeze. When he reached the last rung of the ladder he leaped lightly to the deck of the tugboat. He turned with his characteristic and his wife threw herself into them.

Over here are such a scene takes place in the grimy deck of the tugboat. Here is a man who had received the message of a king without shedding the slightest tear, or exhibiting. But now, on seeing his wife all his reserve gave way. He was no. Dr. Frederick A. Cook, discoverer of the North Pole. He was merely a man who had been separated from his wife and children for more than two years.

When he clasped his wife in his arms either of them uttered a word for some time. Then she murmured, "Oh, Fred, I knew you all the time." Here the strong boy affectionately, but he couldn't for sobbing. Those two little girls finally felt the spell that kept their mother and father silent. They refused to find each used one of Dr. Cook's hands.

"Hello, papa!" cried Ruth, the youngest Helen, the eldest, then climbed to take a greeting, and Dr. Cook picked Ruth up. Then Helen up in his arms and kissed them. Meanwhile, the tug Chipperton had turned her nose toward New York and started off at full speed. As she left she gave the Oscar II. a parting salute, which was responded to by the big cruiser of the fleet. At this time the steamship Monmouth was coming up the bay. She saluted the Gloucester, and the scores of passengers on board her cheered and on the decks and waved a greeting to Dr. Cook.

Bradley Greets the Hero.

As the tug came up the bay one man stood on the upper deck. He was John R. Bradley, the man who financed Dr. Cook's expedition. When Dr. Cook had received anyone else Mr. Bradley stepped forward.

The two men looked into each other's eyes for a moment and then each took the other by the hands. Then stood that way for quite a minute. At the grandstand Dr. Cook could express was in his eyes. He seemed that came to his lips were mere conventionalities. But the two men understood each other.

A number of reporters crowded around Dr. Cook, but he begged to be left alone with his wife and children for a few minutes. With his two brothers, William and Frederick, he passed into the cabin and remained there for about 15 minutes. Then Dr. Cook and Bradley were ready to take the Cook party aboard.

A companion ladder was lowered to the deck and Dr. Cook climbed up. Mrs. Cook and her party remained on the tug, which followed the formal Republic as it passed up the bay, around the battery and up the East River and with a din of whistles, sirens and cheers as has seldom been heard anywhere.

Dr. Cook was almost mobbed once he was aboard the Grand Republic. He was surrounded with members of the Arctic Club, headed by Captain B. S. Osborn, its president, with friends of the members and their wives. Nearly half of the crowd was composed of women. They drove Dr. Cook from one part of the ship to another, pelting him with flowers, and at last made it necessary for him to back up against the door of a stateroom.

From there he made a brief speech in response to the cheers.

"Your numbers and your cheers make a demonstration that should dee the heart of all the world.

"I would have preferred to return to American shores first, but that pleasure was denied me. Instead I came to her mark and the result has come to you by wire.

"I was stranger in a strange land, till the flames with one voice rose up with enthusiasm and supported my claim before all other nations to the conquest of the North Pole. You have come out in numbers and with a token of appreciation given, forcible proof of your faith in me. I can only say that I accept this honor with a due appreciation of its importance. I heartily thank you."

"I Have the Proofs."

After Dr. Cook had ended his speech there was another rush for him. For a few minutes there was a repetition of the burst of handshaking that had greeted him before, but then he was forced to seek refuge within a stateroom. He was questioned again and again and then he made the following statement:

"After one of the most delightful trips of my life across the Atlantic I am in good and even more to see the shores of my native land. I have come from the Pole. I have brought my story and my data with me. The public will be given the complete record of that trip. It is a very short time the narrative, with all the observations, will be published and put before the world for examination. And it will be as easy for you as for me to understand why I cannot on the instance of the moment read off a manuscript which covers the work of two years. As I said upon several occasions all the readings, observations and expressions, doubtful are based on intense ignorance of the supplementary data which I possess.

"No one who has spoken or written on the subject in opposition to my claims knows of the facts with which such exploration work is made. All of the conclusions that I have made have been based upon observations, of which I told in my first dispatches."

The Grand Republic proceeded up the East River to One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street and then turned and ran down the river again to the foot of South Fifth street, Williamsburg.

The reception which greeted her was also given up the harbor was repeated up and down the East River.

Mustache Closely Cropped.

Cook to startling built, but without a bit of superfluous flesh. He now wears a mustache, short and closely cropped. Its complexion is ruddy, and when he talks, which he does often, the gold in his teeth shows distinctly and seems to intensify the sanity of his expression. He is fine set with lashes tall, and he wears his hands clothes well.

At South Fifth street a large crowd awaited him. The explorer and members of the Arctic Club got into automobiles and started away in parade formation, with a band leading them. They went to the Bushwick club. At the club there was a reception with speeches and handshaking. The doors of the club were thrown open to the public for this. After the reception a dinner was served at the club, with Dr. Cook and his wife as guests of honor. The members of the Arctic Club and ten members of the Bushwick Club sat at the tables.

The United Singers of Brooklyn paraded tonight from Arion Hall, 500 strong, and they will give Dr. Cook a serenade. Dr. Cook will make a short speech to the singers. After this Dr. Cook and his family will go in automobiles to the Waldorf-Astoria, where the explorer will remain until after the banquet of Thursday night. There will be receptions to the explorer tomorrow in Brooklyn.

HARRY WHITNEY SAYS COOK REACHED THE POLE FIRST

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—It became known today that a sister of Harry Whitney, the New Haven millionaire, who is now in the Arctic on a hunting expedition, has received a letter from him within the past few weeks, stating that Dr. Frederick A. Cook had discovered the North Pole. The letter, after commenting on Dr. Cook's talk with the writer after the explorer's return from the Pole, makes this statement:

"Isn't it too bad that Commander Peary should have failed in being the first to get to the Pole after all these years and all his attempts.

ALL SYDNEY EN FETE; ROARS A DEAFENING WELCOME TO PEARY

SYDNEY, N. S., Sept. 21.—Commander Robert E. Peary sailed into the harbor today, his ship Roosevelt convoyed by a flotilla of launches, tugs and motor boats, all gaily decorated in flags, while the people on the harbor front cheered, and the sky line was vivid in the tints of flags and bunting.

Although disappointed yesterday, Sydney gave Peary a royal greeting today. As the Roosevelt headed around Barrack Point it was a signal for a grand rush down the bay. With sirens booming and tug whistles shrieking a greeting, the welcoming fleet steamed forth.

Mrs. Peary and her children were the first to reach the Roosevelt on board the private yacht Sheelah. The crew of the Roosevelt lined the rail and at her spanker gaff flaunted the North Pole flag. The Peary Arctic Club flag fluttered from the Wanamat and the New York Yacht Club ensign rippled from the mizzenmast.

Mayor Richardson in the tugboat Winch welcomed the commander in the name of the Dominion of Canada. U. S. Consul Kehl extended the greeting in behalf of Commander Peary's native land.

City Astir Early.

This city was astir early to greet Commander Peary, and through the early morning tugs and launches and every other conceivable kind of craft, filled with flag-waving passengers, were poking their noses into the bay, while thousands of school children waved flags in anticipation of the coming of the explorer.

After long delays and keen disappointments over the non-arrival of the Roosevelt, word was flashed that she was ten miles away. Mrs. Peary, whose one desire was to be the first to greet her husband with her children, were taken aboard the Sheelah and they patiently waited for the Roosevelt to poke her prow around Barrack Point.

The Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes were entwined and colors wreathed every vessel in the harbor. The blasts of whistles echoed across the harbor, while in an instant there was a blur and the masts of lands proclaiming the noisiest greeting ever given Commander Peary in the port, whither he has several times returned unsuccessful.

Master Robert Excited.

With all the air of excitement and bustle and confusion this morning, Mrs. Peary remained calm. She and her children were aboard early, anxious for their tugboat to start, even before the Roosevelt was sighted. Master Peary, with his flag and his Teddy bear, was the most excited of all. He didn't realize the importance of his father's achievement; he would have been just as excited and as glad to see his father if he had not discovered the North Pole.

All the principal buildings of the city were crowned with flags.

Bunting was draped from many residences, and arches were constructed in the streets bearing such inscriptions as: "Welcome to Peary," "Congratulations and Victory."

From the mast of the Royal Cape Breton Yacht Club, in the international signal code of flags, was flashed the message, "Welcome and Congratulations."

Perfect weather prevailed and the Roosevelt broke into view beneath a brilliant sun and a cloudless sky.

Mrs. Peary Hails Husband.

The private yacht Sheelah, owned by James Ross, president of the Dominion Coal Company, outdistanced all the other craft in the race to reach the Roosevelt first. Those on board, in addition to Mrs. Peary, were Master Robert E. Peary, Jr., and Miss Marie Peary, Colonel Bemis, father of George Borup, a member of the Peary expedition; U. S. Consul Kehl and George Kennan, the author.

The Sheelah met the Roosevelt at a point ten miles north of Low Point, the entrance to the harbor. Mrs. Peary stood at the rail and as soon as the vessels were in hailing distance she called to her husband and he answered her greeting.

Master Robert stood beside his mother, waving his flag and throwing kisses to his father. Miss Marie Peary waved her arms and cheered. The crew of the Sheelah gave a cheer which was answered by the crew of the Roosevelt, side by side, the Arctic sloop and the yacht pursued their ways into the harbor. The Roosevelt was decorated for the occasion, and in addition to the flags bunting was draped from the masts and rail.

The official welcoming party was on board the Winch. This party was headed by Mayor Richardson, who forget his Prock pompous dignity and led the cheers when the Roosevelt appreciated. The Winch was also decorated with flags and bunting. As the morning advanced business in Sydney came to a standstill, stores were closed and engines of factories and shops gathered upon the harbor front and around the Sydney Hotel.

TRUEBLOOD PAYS TRIBUTE TO COOK

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—When the steamship Oscar II. docked at Hoboken today, the passengers were unanimous in their praise of Dr. Frederick A. Cook and in their expression of confidence in his story of having discovered the Pole. Captain C. W. Moller, general manager of the Scandinavian-American line, was one of the most enthusiastic admirers of Dr. Cook.

"During the voyage over he was very modest and was not inclined to talk," said Captain Moller. "But when he was asked to tell how he would prove he had discovered the North Pole he would always say that his data would show he had reached the Pole. None of us ever doubted Dr. Cook's story."

A banquet took place on board the Oscar II last Thursday and Dr. Cook attended it.

A speech was made by Dr. Benjamin Trueblood of Boston, who is secretary of the International Arbitration and Peace Conference. Afterwards Dr. Cook listened on the North Pole. His lecture was similar to that he delivered in Copenhagen.

Dr. Trueblood's Tribute.

"Dr. Cook impressed me as being a truthful man," said Dr. Trueblood today. "During the voyage over here he showed himself to be democratic and mixed well with the passengers. He did not display the slightest trace of conceit. About twelve officers were on board and Dr. Cook became very much attached to them. He took but one man to the Pole. They knew more than anybody else about his discovery of the North Pole. He said that he had great faith in Mr. Whitney. He expressed himself as being very sorry as to the way Captain Peary acted and in the same breath he said he had received word that Captain Peary had reached the North Pole.

Professor William Dahl, a music teacher, said that Dr. Cook had impressed him as being a trustworthy man.

Saved from Starvation.

"After long conversations with him during the voyage," he said, "I was really convinced that he had found the North Pole. Dr. Cook said that after he had left the dogs take at the Pole and started back he ran out of ammunition. At times they looked as if he and the Eskimos would starve. There was plenty of game, but nothing to shoot with. Finally Dr. Cook discovered three cartridges in the lining of his clothing. They had gotten there during a former expedition and he did not know he had them. With the cartridges he killed some game and really saved the party from perishing." Dr. Cook once said to me:

"I give Captain Peary all the credit in the world, but time alone will tell who is the real discoverer of the North Pole."

On board the steamship Dr. Cook was introduced to Walter Lonedale, to whom he took a great fancy and whom he finally employed as his private secretary.

PEARY REPORTED WORRIED BY STORY OF PRITCHARD

SYDNEY, N. S., Sept. 21.—A Cook bomb in the shape of a confession from a member of his crew, suddenly burst under Commander Peary and was undoubtedly the excuse for the uncracious manner in which he treated the citizens of Sydney by stopping the Roosevelt at St. Paul's Island and spending the day at the cable station there.

Peary must have known that an elaborate ceremonial of welcome was under way here; that his wife an dchildren were on their toes to greet him after an eighteen months' absence in the land of eternal ice. Yet he lingered through th eday while he queried over the first land wire with which he has been in contact concerning the arrival of Cook and what he had to say.

From several inside sources it is learned that Peary is now struggling to kill the confession of William Pritchard, the steward's assistant on the Roosevelt, that Cook told Harry Whitney in his presence that he (Cook) had been to the North Pole.

The excuse for Pritchard's silence is that he "like Harry Whitney, was bound to silence."

Certainly Cook did not have away enough over Pritchard to obtain permission to remain for more than two days at Etah to remain for more than two days at Etah with his finished two Eskimo companions.

At Battle Harbor the first Thursday Pritchard declared that Dr. Cook had not mentioned the North Pole to him nor had he heard him mention the Pole to Harry Whitney, Bodwalla John Murphy, Pritchard's companion from the Roosevelt at Etah, backed this statement up. They were greatly cullen about it, too, fearing them selves as men who had been badgered for over a year that single issue of fuel. Speculation is rife over the possibility of a mutiny among certain members of the Roosevelt crew who were sworn to silence concerning Dr. Cook.

'I CANNOT UNDERSTAND PEARY,' SAYS COOK IN INTERVIEW WITH FIALA

By ANTHONY FIALA,

Commander of Ziegler Polar Expedition of 1903-1905 and Special Commissioner of the Boston American to greet Dr. Cook on the high seas.

On boarding the liner Oscar II from the tug John J. Timmons, off Fire Island Lightship, I heard a familiar voice:

"Hello, Fiala. Glad to see you."

It was Dr. Cook at the head of the companionway leading to the steerage deck, who had watched me through the perilous climb up a dangling ladder from the bobbing newspaper tug.

"Welcome, Doctor, to America. I congratulate you on your great victory and success in finding the Pole."

"Thank you, Fiala. I can't tell you how glad I am to see you. You are the first man I've seen direct from America," returned Dr. Cook.

"I'm a little ahead of the rest of the committee, thanks to the AMERICAN. I wish to congratulate you on behalf of the Explorers' and Arctic Clubs on your wonderful achievement."

I made my way with Dr. Cook through a crowd of cheering Scandinavians to the promenade deck, where he took me to his suite, where he related:

"I can't tell you how glad I am to see you."

Dr. Cook's first question: "And how is Mrs. Cook? Is she well? When will I see her?" What are the arrangements for my meeting her?"

I was glad to tell him that Mrs. Cook was coming out on a tug, would meet him at Quarantine, and now all Brooklyn was turning out in his honor.

Naturally the thing uppermost in my mind was the Cook-Peary controversy and as my time on board the Oscar II was limited I asked Cook:

"In view of the splendid reception you received in Denmark, indorsed by the government officials save your records and proofs of your great discovery?"

Danish Officials Saw Records.

"Yes, the Danish officials saw my narrative and records. The Danish steamship Gothab, Captain Scorsby, remained in Greenland for two weeks, placing the new North Star Mission. Officers and crew had opportunity for talks with the natives, and the information brought back on that steamer had much to do with the favorable attitude of the people in Denmark."

"Of course, you know," went on Dr. Cook, "that Captain Sverdrup is very enthusiastic in his championing of my cause. I had never met him before and it made me feel very good to receive his warm friendship. Also that of Captain Amundsen and Captain Le Cointe, director of the Brussels Royal Astronomical Observatory."

"Dr. Cook, what do you really think of Peary's attitude?" I broke in at this point.

Dr. Cook laughed, put his hands behind his head—a characteristic thinking attitude—and for a few moments was silent.

"I don't quite understand Peary through this whole business" he said slowly. "I always thought he was a friend of mine."

He held a smiling face, though, as if the whole matter was not troubling him.

"Certainly, I have always treated him as a friend."

"When Dr. Cook turned expectant face asked:

"Has Pritchard said anything."

"Yes, the AMERICAN had an interview with him wired from Sydney," I told him.

"I am not surprised. As a matter of fact, Pritchard overheard me when I was telling Harry Whitney of my discovery of the Pole."

"Why doesn't Whitney come home?" I asked, echoing the question that has been in the mouths of so many thousands of Americans.

"He told me during the Winter that he intended to stay north and hunt big game and that he would not get home until late in October."

I did not ask him why he did not wait at Etah for the relief ship or for Peary's return with his own magnificent housemaker. Any explorer who has been in the Arctic will know how uncertain relief ships must be, and can appreciate how anxious he was to get back, and the only store was to catch the Danish steamer at Upernivik. Just remember the starvation of members of the Greely party who died in the lethargy of a relief ship.

Dr. Cook smiled at my serious expression and volunteered: "Have no fear, Fiala. I have the proofs and they will be forthcoming before long."

We then turned to the story of the trip, and with the AMERICAN flag waving our departure is unfolding. I asked him to recount his long march to and from the Pole. I was particularly interested in his ability to make such remarkable time over the ice. I asked him if he did not strike smoother ice than has been true of most explorers.

"We struck some rough ice near land," he said, "but sailing like that with which you find so common on your expedition. We had little trouble with rough ice portion north.

"We were bothered somewhat by leads (open channels in the ice), finding the wild at the Big Lead, at 83 degrees. Beyond that the going was better. We were tough, bothered by the work, and in good condition, for we had been living on fresh meat for months, and inspired by the thought that with dry we were nearing the place where all meridians cross."

I asked him about his little girl on the north coast of Joyce's Sound, where he spent the Winter after his return from the North Pole. I was thinking of the little girl on Franz Josef Land, where Nansen and Johansen had spent a Winter after their record-breaking trip toward the Pole. They had coaxed their fur over with walrus hides and I asked Dr. Cook if he followed their plan.

"No, Fiala, we covered our hut with snow and moss, and stretched moss on hide over the top."

This is just an interesting detail of Dr. Cook's life in the North, one of the distinctive details bound to come out when he publishes his full story later on.

His Family First.

It was from this Winter hut that Dr. Cook had to make his 50-mile trips, with out dogs, to Etah, he and his Eskimo dragging the sledge, which contained their sole supply of food, meat and fur in exhibit records, all that he had to prove his most wonderful trip.

It was easy to see that Dr. Cook's mind was on his home, almost in sight, just beyond reach, because of the nativity of that Brooklyn suburban consideration. He asked again about his wife and children.

"It seems to me," he said, "as though I am just now away from my home. The hours have treated me magnificently, but I wonder if I know how good old Fire Island light looks to me."

"I'm not working yet. I have the book to publish, but I hope they allow me the first night course with my family."

Dr. Cook's brother at Hillsboro, N. Y., had communicated by cable for relief. I asked him if he had used his sledges of those of the type used by Peary in his northern work. Dr. Cook said:

"I constructed my own sledges during the Winter at Etah from wood turned over by my brother from the hickory trees that grow so generously in the vicinity of Callicoon. They stood the service so well that I am back here to tell the story."

The last time I had seen Dr. Cook was almost three years ago on his return from climbing Mount McKinley, in Alaska, when he seems in perfect health than ever I have seen him. His cheeks were ruddy, his eyes bright, and his flesh had the stamp of condition.

He had read me with the truth of his statements. Although I had always felt that he had reached the Pole, my half talk with him at his cabin on the Oscar II went far toward confirming me that both Cook and Peary reached the Pole. I would be more disappointed than ever now, and surprisingly so, if anything should come in later that would prove either man a liar.

One photograph was taken shortly after the explorer was taken aboard the Hans Egede in the far north and the other subsequent to his visit to the barber and clothier in Copenhagen.

Dr. Cook Before and After Returning

All Europe is laughing at the Italians. Their discovery is a matter most grossly out of their understanding. The original "moon" and "noon" Commander Peary said had established his position at 89 degrees 57 minutes on April 6 by observations taken at noon.

RASMUSSEN GOES NORTH TO EXAMINE COOK'S ESKIMOS

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 21.—The steamer Hans Egede, on which Dr. Cook returned to civilization, has started for Greenland. She will return in November with Knud Rasmussen, who is to cross-examine Dr. Cook's Eskimos.

Dr. Stromgren, professor of astronomy, to examine Dr. Cook's observations and records.

The authorities of the Copenhagen Club, which have directed Dr. Peschel and Ellis to their stations in November for his vacation.

CHURCH POOR BOXES LOOTED BY FIREBUGS

Following an investigation into the origin of the incendiary fire at the Sacred Heart Church in Malden square by the police to-day, Inspector George Edward Greenleaf of the Malden police department discovered that three altar donation boxes for the poor had been blown open and the boxes rifled.

The police say that two boys who were passing the church just before the fire broke out last night saw flashes of light within the building, soon followed by flames in the rear wing of the structure.

After investigation by Rev. P. J. Hallery, the pastor, and Rev. George P. O'Connor, the damage to the building and contents was placed at $5,000, the fire damage being placed at $1,000. The vestments, altar and interior decorations were damaged by smoke and a piano was also destroyed.

Originating in the choir boys' locker room under a rear stairway, the fire lasted late last night, but was prevented from spreading into the main part of the building. Rev. Father Hallery and Father O'Connor, who gained his way through the smoke and flames to the tabernacle containing the blessed sacrament, which he removed. Leaving the room he closed the fire door between the fire-swept section and the main part of the building. He was nearly unconscious when he succeeded in making his way out of the building. After reviving he again entered the building through a second-story window and groped his way to the switchboard, throwing on the electric lights through the edifice.

Within two years the Church of the Immaculate Conception on Salem street was twice fired.

ITALIANS CONFOUND THE 'MOON' AND 'NOON' AND EUROPE LAUGHS

LONDON, Sept. 21.—A couple of Italian astronomers touched a sensation by figuring out that the moon was too visible to the Arctic regions on April 6, when as they put it, Commander Peary had calculated his latitude as 89 degrees 57 minutes north by lunar observations. To-day

Running Rotten Wrong

Of course, there are two sides to the question. There always are. Here is the big, smooth, silent, powerful service corporation. If it could speak and would permit an interview it would probably say:

"I'm not in politics. I'm in business. Politicians sometimes try to raid me and I prevent it, but I take no hand in what is going on except when it concerns my business. I have to protect my stockholders; my duty is to them, and, moreover, I am run by men whose private lives are above reproach. I am not responsible for these things you complain of. Evil has always existed and always will."

And against that stands the little ninety-eight pound judge—JUDGE BEN B. LINDSEY, of Denver, Colorado, and he says in substance to the service corporation:

"You are the boss. Nobody asked you to take charge of things, but you dictate the candidates for both parties for the same office at the same election. Your brains have made crime scientific. Your ability to organize has made it more profitable. You have grabbed the State; and to protect what you have grabbed you find it necessary to corrupt all who stand in your way—from the judge to the sheriff's deputy. Don't tell us that you are not responsible. You run the State and the State isn't running right. In fact, it's running very rotten wrong. Run it better, or get out. It's your mess; you've got to stand for it."

When you open Judge Lindsey's "BEAST AND THE JUNGLE" in the October EVERYBODY'S MAGAZINE you will begin to read the most amazingly concrete revelation of cussedness—political and municipal—that has ever been told by a man who knew what he was talking about. The application is for every city in the United States big enough to know the meaning of the word "graft."

And politics aside, it is a story that will carry you right off your feet.

Unless all signs fail there won't be any too many copies of EVERYBODY'S MAGAZINE in sight after the first rush, and you are respectfully urged to get yours now.

THREE BRIDGES FOUND UNSAFE FOR NEW CARS

City Engineer Jackson reported to Mayor Hibbard today that the Dover street, Broadway and the Dorchester avenue bridges were unsafe for the traffic of the new semi-convertible cars of the elevated road.

At the present time none of this type of car is used by the company on the lines that travel these bridges, but Alderman O'Hare was given to understand that it is proposed to install some of the new cars on the South Boston routes, and he requested Mayor Hibbard to have the bridges examined.

WOMEN TO AID PRISONERS IN STONE DEATH

AYER, Sept. 21.—Two women have come to the aid of Raymond Ploaffe, who, with George Lapointe, is held for the murder of Dr. Henry N. Stone near here a week ago last night. The women are Mrs. Benjamin N. Hartwell, the widow of a doctor of this place, and Mrs. John Chute, the wife of a farmer who lives near the home of Mrs. Clara Stone Davis, by whom Ploaffe was employed.

Both of the women declare that they had frequently seen Ploaffe with plenty of money before the murder of the rich doctor, while he is believed to have robbed of about $500. The motive of the murder, the police believe, was robbery.

Believes Both Innocent.

"Ploaffe came to my house last Wednesday evening," said Mrs. Hartwell, "and drove Miss Lillian Ohlson to the home of a friend. Miss Ohlson is my maid. I have talked to Ploaffe, and I do not believe that he could have committed the crime or that he would have been here Wednesday night if he had killed Dr. Stone on Monday night."

"I know Ploaffe and Lapolate well," said Mrs. Chute, "and I believe they are innocent. I expect to be called to court, and I'll tell all I know then. That is all I will say now."

The police today found a cord with which they believe the pasteboard apple box which Dr. Stone carried when he was killed was bound. The cord was found at the Davis farm. This, the authorities say, further goes to show that Ploaffe had something to do with the crime.

Attacked in Buggy?

Bloody finger marks were found on the strawboard box and on the whip. These marks correspond. Both the strawboard box and the whip are submitted to a microscopical examination today by experts to see whether or not the finger smudges on them coincide with the finger lapreselves taken of Ploaffe and Lapolate.

The fact that blood was found on the whip convinces the investigating officers that Dr. Stone was attacked with the whip while driving along the Harvard highway to the Ayer railroad station.

It is their belief that Dr. Stone was shot as he was sitting in the buggy, that he put up a desperate fight, and that his assailants dragged him from the team and killed him on the roadside to clubbing him to death.

The whip was found in some underbrush about 200 yards from the spot where the dentist's body was discovered. Not only were there blood stains on the handle, but the top was broken about one-third the distance down from the snapper.

When this whip was shown to Mrs. Charles Stone Davis, sister of Dr. Stone, and the woman for whom Ploaffe worked, she positively identified it as her property. She said it had always been used in the top buggy, the same one that Dr. Stone and Ploaffe rode in from the Davis farm on the night of the murder.

Nothing succeeds like circulation. The AMERICAN has quantity and quality.

YOUNG BRIDE FEARS KNIFE; ENDS LIFE

That Mrs. Annie L. Freeman, twenty-three years of age, of No. 9 Lansing street, Roxbury, swallowed crandite of potassium and died on her way to the hospital as the result of despondency and fear that she would have to undergo a sixth surgical operation became known today by police. The young woman, who had been married for four years, has been in ill health for the past two years. Recently she told her aunt, Mrs. Mary Chasken, with whom she lived, that she intended to take her own life.

KIDNAPPERS BREAK UP COURTING BEE

WINSTED, Ct., Sept. 21.—George Prichard of Plymouth is looking for the men who kidnapped him when he was calling on Miss Lulu Nodine at Reynolds Bridge. At 9 p. m. there was a knock at the Nodine home and some one asked to see Mr. Prichard. He responded and about ten young men seized him. The party took him into the woods, where they bound him hand and foot and left him.

THREE DEAD, FOUR HURT IN TRAIN WRECK

LEBANON, N. H., Sept. 21.—Three men were killed and four hurt today in a rear end collision between Trains No. 1 and No. 6, Boston bound, the Quebec and Montreal expresses, at Canaan, fourteen miles south of this town.

The dead are:

JOHN CALLAHAN, engineer of Train No. 6, home at Concord, N. H.

FRANK PARMENTER, fireman, Train No. 6, home at Somerset, N. H.

UNKNOWN TRAMP on Montreal express.

The injured are:

JOHN GILMAN, engineer of helping locomotive.

FRED CROSS, fireman of helper. Both legs were hurt by jumping.

GEORGE SERANT, porter, cut and bruised.

Unknown child, cut about the head.

The cause of the wreck, which happened at 4:40 a. m., was due to escaping steam from the engine of the Quebec train which threw it far behind its usual running time. This train left White River Junction at 4:27. Eight minutes later the Montreal express left the junction. Had the Quebec train been able to keep up its usual speed the wreck would not have happened. The Montreal train came along in the dark and went into the rear end of the Quebec train. The Quebec train had to be given out behind to warn the Montreal train.

The first known of the danger ahead was when Engineer Gilman and Fireman Cross saw the rear car of the train ahead looming out of the fog.

After setting the brakes and turning off the steam both jumped. The double header piled right into the train ahead, and Engineer Callahan and Fireman Parmenter were killed in the wreck of their engine.

The crash took place about 1:30 this morning. It was some time before word was sent here and wrecking trains and doctors rushed to the scene. So far as known no passengers were hurt.

You see the AMERICAN everywhere—in the homes, clubs, restaurants, hotels, cars and boats.

WOMAN BOUND, HOME ROBBED IN DAYLIGHT

Two burglars in broad daylight entered the home of Martin A. Kilduff at No. 7 Bowdoin street, tied his wife Alice securely to the bed post, ransacked the house, stole property valued at $150 and escaped.

The sensational facts became known today through a bulletin given out at police headquarters. The robbery took place yesterday and Mrs. Kilduff was not released until her husband reached home and unfastened the cords that held her.

The thieves got a gold watch, $23 in cash, a man's blue suit and a number of napkins, tablecloths and bed sheets. The police of the Adamant station were notified of the robbery and Captain Swan and his men are looking for the two men. Their descriptions as furnished to the police are as follows:

No. 1—Between thirty and forty years of age. Five feet five inches tall. Dark complexion. Broken nose. Dark clothes and a black derby hat.

No. 2—Between thirty and forty years old. Five feet eleven inches tall. About 160 pounds. Light gray suit and light tan derby. Blue necktie.

Kilduff is a mounted engineer on the Boston Elevated Railroad. He has lived at his present home for many years. He reached his home late yesterday afternoon and learned about the house for his wife had begun was attracted to the basement where he heard a groan. There he found Mrs. Kilduff tied to the bed. She was so frightened that she could hardly talk. "What has happened?" cried the husband.

"Two men did it," she replied. "They came into the house shortly after 1 o'clock, grabbed me and tied me. I was too frightened to cry out. They ransacked the house. I do not know what they took."

The house was looked over and it was found that the robbers had carried away the articles enumerated. Kilduff then reported the matter to the police.

Mrs. Kilduff would not talk to reporters, she came to the door and so far as could be seen there were no marks of a struggle about her. The story as she told it to neighbors was that the two men got into the house by a side door.

"We have dropped a long distance in Boston," one of them said to her. "Haven't you got a quarter for us?"

"No," replied Mrs. Kilduff, "I have no money."

"Well," answered one of the men, "if you haven't a quarter, maybe you have fifty cents."

"No, and if you don't go away I'll call my husband."

Mrs. Kilduff turned, she says, as if to call her husband, when she was grasped from behind. She says she remained tied from 1:30 until 5:30 in the afternoon. Mrs. E. M. Stearns, who lives directly across the hall from the Kilduffs, says she heard no noise nor any indication that such a robbery was taking place.

BROUGHT COLOR TO HER CHEEKS

Then Strength Returned and This Bloodless Woman Became Well.

There are many men, women and even children suffering from anemia, which means "too little blood." The disease is well named, for the patient actually has a deficiency of blood which affects every part of the body. There is a lack of energy, a characteristic pallor, a sense of suffocating after the least exertion, generally described as a shortness of breath. The disease comes on gradually and is often well advanced before it is recognized.

Too often medical treatment is unsatisfactory and the disease progresses until it becomes hopeless.

A long-standing case, which resisted treatment until Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were tried, is described by Mrs. Clinton E. Hale, of No. 104 Bristol avenue, Lockport, N. Y., in the following statement:

"When I was about fourteen years of age I began to fail rapidly in health. Although I had always been a frail child, I now had to quit school. I was weak and tired out all of the time. In walking fast or going up stairs it seemed that I couldn't walk fast enough to keep up with the heart beats. I had palpitation of the heart and occasional dizzy spells. I became awfully thin and pale. I had no appetite and suffered with indigestion. I didn't have any life or ambition and was sensitive and irritable. I finally became so weak that I could hardly walk.

"The doctors seemed to disagree about my case and their medicine did not help me. My parents were alarmed at my condition and, upon the advice of our minister's wife, had me try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. By the time I had taken two boxes of the pills I could notice an improvement in my condition. I could eat better, wasn't so weak and my color came back. I took the pills until entirely cured."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have also cured such blood diseases as rheumatism, after-effects of the grip and fevers. Owing to the intimate relation between the blood and nerves, the pills have been found invaluable in nervous diseases.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all druggists or sent, postpaid, on receipt of price, 50 cents per box; six boxes for $2.50, by the Dr. Williams Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

MIKE TWIN IN FINE SHAPE TO BATTLE TERRY MARTIN

The show at the Armory Club tonight, when Mike (Twin) Sullivan of Cambridge and Terry Martin of Philadelphia face each other for twelve rounds, should be one of the best contests brought to Boston locally in a long time.

It is the first appearance of Sullivan or Martin before the members of the Armory Club, and as both are exceedingly eager to make a good impression they will strive their hardest to score a victory. Both men are in grand physical shape and should be able to put up one of the best bouts ever seen locally.

Admittedly fast, Sullivan is the more clever and shifty of the pair. Martin showed against Honey Melody so much aggressiveness and cleverness that he will come back for more if matched where he faces Twin tonight.

In the opening preliminary Young Fanger of Cambridge takes the place of Carl Lappe against Teddy Murphy. Lappe is suffering from a sore foot and cannot go on. Tom Foley will meet a hot customer in Jack Powers of Pawtucket, opening portion of Frank Perron. The semi-final between Young Delaney of Northboro and Young Nixon of Cambridge

JENNINGS' BIG OFFER TO LEAD THE PHILLIES

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 21.—Reports that Hughey Jennings, manager of the Detroit American League team, would manage the Philadelphia National League team next season, were circulated during the visit of Detroit. While here Jennings admitted that he had received an offer from the owners of the club, that he had given it serious consideration, and he stated, in the presence of the owners of the Detroit Club, that he would probably accept the offer.

While nothing is in sight at this early date, evening developments indicate that Jennings will be received with a big offer from the owners of both Philadelphia National League club to take charge of the team next season, and I don't see how he can turn down.

There are the tales about Jennings made this report sure. Fred Yankey, the owner of the Detroit club, decided Navin of the Tigers, Clarke, Rigler and A. Pott, the latter two of this city.

It is reported that the owners of the Phillies have offered Jennings $15,000 a season.

DONOVAN HAS RUNNERS IN TRAINING

Coincident with football practice there starts the training of the cross-country runners at all the big universities in the country.

Pooch Donovan, the Harvard trainer, will have his squad on within a few days getting in shape for the run this year's big 10-mile race that promises the best Saturday in November. Herbert Jacques, the remarkable mile runner at the Crimson university, will again be seen at that event. Pooch Frank Kennedy will have a big bunch out at work within the next week.

Besides your Penn state colleges reported that unrecognizable cross-country men and there are some prospects of this being several more this year.

From the appearance of things at the present time it looks as if the race for individual honors this year will be between H. Jones of Cornell, the winner last November; Percy Taylor, the intercollegiate champion (probable also of Cornell); W. C. Bell of Pennsylvania, the double record holder, and Jones.

Jones made the fastest distance runners in the world last year and his performance this year should be productive of a new record if the going is good.

BASEBALL MAGAZINE FULL OF FEATURES

The Baseball Magazine for October completes the third volume of this sight addition to the base ball literature and with an increased number of illustrations it looks to be just what the fans want. In its pages can be found the final judgment of the baseball writers on the season's story on the Southern League. Here Wildcats narrative of the world's series played in baseball. Odd stories of "A Fan," Fan. J. Ryan, Frank Chance, Ed. Walsh, Tom Connolly, Thomas Povey, an old time catcher, ing and a story by J. Ed Grant, umpire, on "The Game and Its Critics." Baseball attendance figures are given and Will writes on the cultural and literary qualities who treats of the game as a "science."

GOTCH MUST MEET HACK THIS WINTER

DES MOINES, Ia., Sept. 21.—Frank Gotch, heavyweight champion wrestler of the world, has been notified by officials of an athletic club in Sydney, Australia, he must meet Hack Wolgast in order to wrestle George Hackenschmidt this Winter. Gotch has agreed to face Wolgast, the Australian pronounce, it is understood, Gotch will leave Australia on a series of articles for a championship match with Hack.

Agreed At Last

However widely opinions may differ on other points, all who speak from experience agree on this: That Frank Jones Ale has no equal in purity, quality or flavor.

GOLF GOSSIP NEWS OF THE LINKS

J. C. Anderson's victory over H. W. Stuckin in the final of the recent Woodland meeting was one of the many instances where the unexpected happened. It was also a fair example of the limitless possibilities of golf. Anderson is a boy of 18 and only 5 to play. Stuckin, the three time winner of the New Hampshire State title, would naturally be considered a sure thing against almost any player in the country.

When the crack players who are to be the guests of Hugo B. Freeman next fall on the Myopia links this week there is bound to be something doing. Last year when this same group of players got together they nearly came close batteries for three days of the meeting.

While Massachusetts usually can give the Rhode Island golf team a little the best of an argument on the links, the outcome of the annual match next Saturday at Agawam is anything but a foregone conclusion. With the Rhode Islanders on their home course and not a few crack players on their list they have to give the Hub representatives a good battle when they get together.

Nothing succeeds like circulation. The AMERICA has quantity and quality.

NO ACTION IN M'NAMARA CASE

By far the smallest representation of clubs enlisted under the New England Association of the Amateur Athletic Union attended the annual meeting held last night at the Exchange House. Representatives of 22 clubs were present, due in a measure to the changes proferred in handicapper Frank S. Meredith against Joseph J. McNamara, for mismanagement and resulted unsuccessful as manager of track meetings.

A hearing was given both parties by a committee consisting of President M. F. Whitney, Edward J. Rath and Al M. McCormick. Four sessions were held at which witnesses were heard, at which time the charges were brought before the board of governors for action. The above named committee was appointed last night to report last night. Recommendations were advanced by the investigating committee, and the matter of the general meeting was referred to the board of governors, which met immediately after. If they decided on A. by the matter on the table, to be brought up at any time that the president saw fit.

IN TEN-MILE CROSS-COUNTRY HANDICAP

The annual 10-mile cross-country handicap cup of the North Cambridge A. A. will be held this year on the afternoon of Saturday, October 2. This race, which is a lifelong one, and which will be run over the New England cross-country course, attracts all the foremost distance runners in this section, and has always been the initial event of preparing to fight hitherto unknown wonders of the long distance. The entries close September 30 with J. A. Tuppeny, North Cambridge Junction.

The Irish-American A. A. of Lowell will hold a big outdoor athletic meeting at Spaulding Park, Lowell, next Saturday. In addition to a relay race open to local residents and a potato and flower race not bad, the following events will be open to all registered athletes, all scratch: 100 yard dash, quarter-mile run, mile run, running high jump, running broad jump, putting 16-pound shot and hop, step and leap. Entries close with Michael Rourke, 28 Appleton street, Lowell, September 23.

TITER'S FAST COLT.

Henry Titer has taken South with his string the fast two-year-old gelding Kreb by Kavalli (4) (2:07¾), dam by Arion (4) (2:07¾), owned by George Leonard of Roxbury, Mass. The colt will likely not start this fall, Lexington is reached, as the colt was quite sick for several weeks and has not been rounding to. Previous to being sick the youngster had trotted a mile in 2:22.

HARVARD SQUAD IN FIRST REAL SCRIMMAGE

The first scrimmage of the season is scheduled for the Harvard football squad today, when the crimson candidates will divide into elevens for real offensive and defensive work. It will be the first real test of the candidates, and the Harvard coaches will have their first opportunity for testing the generability of the applicants for quarterback.

Of all the positions the centre place seems now to be the most in doubt, and the Crimson coaches are puzzling their heads over the problem. Wrec and Paul Withington seem to be the most likely starters now for that position at present. Withington, who is the favorite for this berth, has not been doing regular work and has just returned from a three days' vacation.

The Harvard faculty are expected to pass upon the eligibility of McKay and Kenard in a few days, and until then their positions at tackle and back respectively will remain in doubt. Kennard still insists upon his right to play this year, but the college officer takes the opposing view. McKay and Kenard will make up examinations in the beginning of next week or be dropped from the football squad.

Another man whose studies are interfering with his playing is H. E. Rogers, who played end on last year's second team. He also has two examinations to pass off before he can be eligible for the team. He is one of the most powerful men in college and has the proper amount of weight to make him a first string end if he comes out.

Coach Percy Haughton is spending a great deal of time in perfecting the forward pass as well as in developing a punting game. Haughton considers the forward pass one of the specialties this year, in view of the new rules on this subject. Much of the time devoted to quarterback work has a different method of running off the forward pass. Fiherty, who has absorbed Daly's teaching thoroughly, has perhaps the easiest and most effective style. He gives the ball a vertical whirling movement in the air, while the quarterback Wigglesworth and Quarterback Potter—give the pigskin a horizontally whirling movement.

If McKay and Fish are to be the two regular tackles, the guard position needs strengthening in order to balance. Dunlap and Hall are the two of these positions, and H. K. Sandford and H. K. Bush, two new men, will try for them in a fight for the other guard position.

TENNEY WILL NOT QUIT GAME

Fred Tenney arrived at his home in Newton last night and denied the story to the effect that he had decided to quit baseball for good.

He said that his leg had been bothering him a little, and after a conference with Manager McGraw both thought it best that he should give up the game for the rest of the season. As there is no possibility for New York to figure in the race for the flag, the decision was a natural one.

HAMBURG BELLE TO RACE UHLAN IN KY.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Sept. 21.—It was announced today that the third and deciding race for the trotting championship between Hamburg Belle and Uhlan would likely be run at the fall meeting of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association, meeting in Grenney-W. J. Andrews, trainer and manager of Hamburg Belle, declined to have a hitch with his string, is favorable to the proposition and negotiations have been opened by secretary Wilson with the owner of Uhlan.

GOODMAN BEATS GARY.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Sept. 21.—Yank Kenny made his debut in the South in a referee last night at the Phoenix Club. Danny Goodman and Tommy Gary, both of Chicago, fought an eight-round bout, which went the limit, with the decision to Goodman. Kenny was forced to step in and referee a draw for Gary. There was no decision between Tommy Dixon of New York and the decision over Tommy O'Rourke, Memphis lightweight, was popular. The Memphis kid knocked out Kid Collins in five rounds.

YALE WORRIED ABOUT SHAPE OF VETERANS

NEW HAVEN, Sept. 21.—The oval's critics of the diamond begins today. Yale football quarters have aroused from their year's quietude, and droves of husky and ambitious youngsters are eagerly pressing forward to win the coveted "Y." The quarterbacks have been at the Summer home of Dewitt Cochrane, Greenpoint, L. I., for the last ten days going through their paces under the eyes of Headcoach Howard Jones and are reported to be in good shape for practice.

The condition of several of the veterans is causing considerable worry here. Fisher is considered doubtful if Kilpatrick, Nordell, Hobbs and Andrews have entirely recovered from their injuries of last Fall, particularly the first two, whose knees were broken.

All hands are confident that later in the season Captain Coy will be back in the line as good as new and several of the other veterans will likely be replaced by youngsters in the early games.

Reports from Cambridge and Princeton show that Harvard and the Tiger are in good early shape and that where their veterans have dropped out promising new material has been found to fill the gaps. All in all, the outlook is for one of the greatest seasons in the history of the American game.

COMSTOCK AND CONNOLLY MEET

Pat Connolly, who wrestles Jim Comstock at the Columbia tomorrow evening, is the undisputed champion of the British Isles, having decisively beaten Alex Gotch, the Lemm-Gotch wrestler, who won the title a little over a year ago from James Esson. Connolly also defeated Lemm, the London grappler, the man who was selected by the National Sporting Club to face Gotch, but the Lemm-Gotch match fell through on account of the prohibitive price put upon his services by Gotch, which the London sporting writers claimed was a loophole for Gotch to crawl out of a big contract.

Tom O'Rourke, the well-known New York sporting man and the backer of George Dixon, Joe Walcott and other specialists of note, is looking after the interests of Connolly in this country, and is trying to get a match with Gotch for his man.

Connolly is a native of the County Galway, Ireland, and has several relatives and friends in Boston. He is sure of a rousing welcome at the Columbia.

Jim Comstock, his opponent, is one of the youngsters in this country, being something after the Westergaard type. He is a shifty fellow who will give Connolly a good argument.

JACK JOHNSON WORKING HARD FOR HIS BOUT

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 21.—When Willus Britt and his man Stanley Ketchel arrive in town tomorrow they will find heavyweight Champion Jack Johnson, their next opponent, almost in fighting condition. Johnson is leaving no mean grow under his feet, as is evidenced by the hard day's work he did in the gymnasium on Sunday.

To begin with the negro went out on the Ocean boulevard, and before a fair crowd he boxed four rounds with Joe Mills. He punched the bag upstairs in the small gymnasium of the Seal Rock dancing pavilion, used the pulleys, skipped the rope and shadow boxed.

Jack ended by stepping on the scales and tilting the beam at the 206 mark. It was given out today that Johnson's weight when he goes into the ring with Ketchel will be somewhere around 195 pounds. That the champion will not want for sparring partners was made plain yesterday. Jack Fitzpatrick, who sent Johnson out of the business, was a visitor to his former charge's camp, and while there offered his present protege, Frank Manieli, to act as sparring mate. Afterward Johnson has two camp fellows in Joe Mills and Big Bob Armstrong.

Charles Lecourt, manager of the Pacific Athletic Club, announced that the fight that he had matched Lew Powell, who recently defeated Young Erne over in Oakland, Promise for a twenty-round fight before his club for October 5.

JEFFRIES IS NOW IN PARIS

PARIS, Sept. 21.—James J. Jeffries arrived here from Carlsbad, where he has been taking the cure to reduce his weight for his scheduled fight with Jack Johnson for the heavyweight championship of the world. Jeffries will return to America early in October.

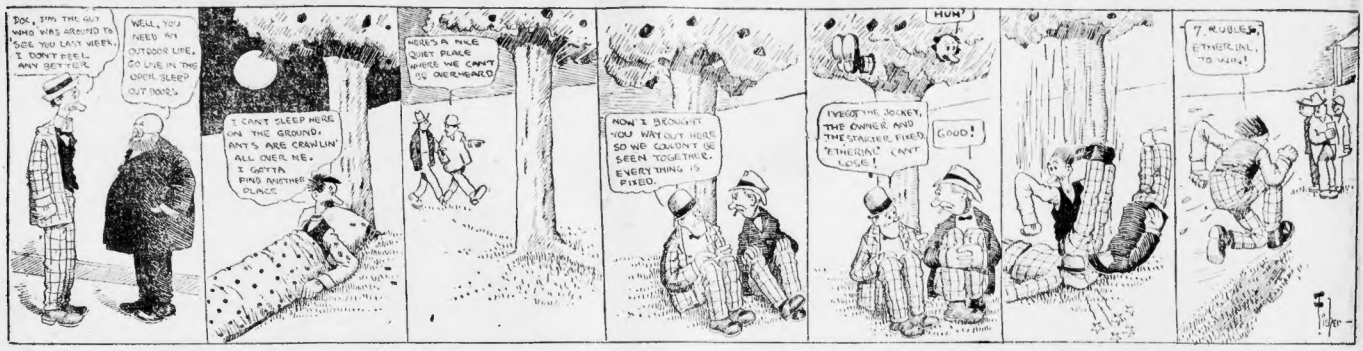
JACK JOHNSON IN SHAPE FOR KETCHEL BOUT

BOSTON AMERICAN SPORTS

HARVARD SQUAD START IN REAL PRACTICE

Mutt Falls Into Some Real "Inside Info" on the Ponies—By Bud Fisher



STRAIGHT DOPE
FOR SPORT FANS

THAT AMERICAN LEAGUE baseball race is tightening up again and the Tigers do not appear to have as much of a clinch for the flag as they had some time ago. The Athletics are coming strong, and put it down in your little book that if Connie Mack's men win this dope column is likely to be conspicuous by its absence for a day or two, as the celebration I am planning to give myself will be something troublous while it lasts. Some time ago I doped it out that Philadelphia, Detroit and Boston would be the way they would run, and I figure it stronger that way now than ever. Pittsburg has the National race nailed down and I'm boosting hard for that civil war which will be pulled off in Pennsylvania when Pittsburg and Philadelphia get to fighting it out.

IT CERTAINLY DOES BEGIN TO look as if the would-be sports who were instrumental in getting the Langford-Ketchel bout stopped have killed the game in New York, until after election at least.

The Bedford Club of Brooklyn had planned to pull off an entertainment last night, in which the other pretenders were Jimmy Walsh of Boston and Max Hetfron. Late yesterday evening the club decided to take no chances and the bouts are called off, and now there will be nothing stirring in the boxing line in the big town.

MIKE TWIN SULLIVAN AND TERRY Martin will mess each other up at the Armory Club this evening, and take it from me it will be a bout worth seeing. Mike Twin has not performed in his home town for several years and there will be a host of his admirers on hand to boost his game along and he has promised to go after that Martin person right from the start. If Mike should fail to make good he is down and out so far as being a claimant for championship honors is concerned and he declares that title looks good to him. I'm for Mike if he gets out and does his business right, but I'm against him if he tries to stall through. I'll tell you how it happened.

NEW YORK FIGHT PANS WHO WERE almost batty over the prowess of Ketchel have taken another think, and the short end of a two to one bet is about the best they give him in his mill with Jack Johnson. It's about the right odds, too, for our old friend Stanley is to my opinion a very much over-rated scrapper. What has brought the Gotham dans down to earth more than anything else is a general belief in the big town that Ketchel and his press agent, Willus Britt, awoke to the fact that they were up against a tough proposition in Sam Langford, and they found a way to side-step him. Some of the wisest of them believe that Willus's fine Italian hand had a lot to do with stirring up the agitation which resulted in the bout being called off, and I'm not much surprised if this is true. I have feed-box info direct from the Fairmount Club that some startling developments will be sprung by that organization in a few days, which will show just what caused the fight to be called off, and that these developments will reflect on credit on Ketchel and Britt.

E. B. J., BROOKLINE—BACK UP quick, old man, you can't get me to settle any bet as to who was the best under the wire in the race for the Pole, and my opinion on that would be a mighty poor thing to settle a bet on. Personally, I am strong for Dr. Cook for a number of reasons, chief of which is that he appears to be the best sport and is trifling in that none-the-serious that runs to be the dominant characteristic in Peary's make-up. And say, it does me great that Cook is heading Peary back to the United States. When Peary arrives he'll and most of the "Welcome" mats turned up side down.

Providence, R. I.,

Straight Dope, Boston American:

Regarding the fight which was to take place between Ketchel and Langford of the Governor of New York City stop the bout, why should they not go to Reno or some other place and settle the question as to who is the middleweight champion of the world. Ketchel is seeking of fighting Jack Johnson. Why not dispose of Langford and Ketchel's choice of the Negro Champion, the latter's chance of fighting Johnson would be better. Britt would see to it that Ketchel had been fixed for Johnson. Langford would look much different to tell Langford has the Indian sign on Ketchel, and no one knows it better than Ketchel himself. I think Ketchel is very clever Man and Mister Johnson of the Ring knows. But why not accomplish this task before Jess or the Colored Man away so should do it so he can get a return bout. Respectfully yours,

Would you please inform Myself and another reader of the ladies' bill on the Mutt and Jeff tour, which is now playing at the Park? BOSTON AMERICAN was Mosquito, the New York Telegraph was Mutt and Jeff, and what I want to know is, did Mutt play over the top or through the middle? Have been playing bets on same on Saturday's games and am losing. Will Mutt play over the top or through the middle? Yours truly, SUB.

Mosquito was coupled in the betting with Woodcraft in the first game, and after he was pulled off. Attell stalled all the way to the twelfth round, and in my opinion could have ended the fight any time he wanted to after the first few rounds.

BIG ROCHESTER FAIR IS OPENED

ROCHESTER, N. H., Sept. 27.—The fourth annual fair of the Rochester Agricultural and Mechanical Association was opened this morning at the beautiful Gold Spring Park with more than 15,000 in attendance. One of the most interesting features of the fair introduced by the management is the decision to have the children of the country around about as its guests.

They are admitted free to all the management's attractions, including the fair itself, and the Shoemen on the "Midway" are also throwing open their gates to the kiddies.

In addition to the "Midway" there is a magnificent floral fair; a splendid exhibition of some of the finest horses in New England are on exhibition, both workers and racing stock. The sheep and swine show that old New Hampshire can raise the best. Here is indeed a fair that shows there is the wonderful New England display of fine pollet breeds and fancy work. The Floral Court is more beautiful than ever.

LIKE PLAN OF HOLDING FALL AUTO RUN

By J. C. KERRISON.

There was a gathering of the clans during the lunch hours at the Bay State Automobile Association yesterday. Some thirty members took occasion to patronize the grill, on this, the first day of the renewal of the luncheon season. One large party was that consisting of the salesmen of the Diamond Rubber Company, who were entertained by Manager Weber of the local branch. They enjoyed the lunch immensely and did not talk "shop."

The idea of holding a run between Boston, Providence, Worcester, Fitchburg, Lowell and back to Boston, as suggested in the AMERICAN on Sunday, met with considerable favor at the hands of the local clubs yesterday. Several dealers who were asked about the matter expressed the opinion that such a run would prove of material benefit to the local industry and is something that should be developed by either one of the two local organizations.

Ray McNamara, who drove the chain-man's car in the recent A. A. A. tour, is spending the week in Boston, having with him the famous No. 2 clean score car off the Glidden tour. This car has done considerable work since it started on the tour to Denver and return with signal honors.

Immediately after its return to the Premier factory the car was shipped to Philadelphia to participate in the run of Premier agents from Philadelphia to Cape May and return September 11 and 12, given by the Motor Company, the Philadelphia distributors, and was used on that occasion by the chairman of the run.

Following this event it was shipped to Boston, and even though the car has run several thousand miles it is in apparently as good physical condition, barring the external finish, as when it left the Indianapolis factory. It will be used by the Boston agents during the fall and certainly offers convincing evidence to anyone interested in taking a ride on it that it has not suffered by the hard use to which it has been subjected.

MELROSE ELEVEN TO PLAY NEXT SATURDAY

The candidates of the Melrose High football team had their first practice yesterday at Pine Banks, in response to the call of Capt. W. T. Peabody twenty-two men lined up in uniform when Fred O'Connell was out in uniform with the boys.

Many of the candidates were: Joseph Doherty, Harold Grant, Harold Whitney, Harold Stanwood, Clarence Wannamaker, Earle Page, Walter Brock, John Sullivan, Frank Reynolds, Roger Whichelo, David Craig, Moore Crowell, Edward Pitchett, Harold Hodgkins, Rourke, Robert Guest. The schedule, as announced by Manager N. A. Barnes, is: Lawrence, 15; Durham at Melrose, 16; Beverly at Melrose, 23; Medford at Salem Oval, 30; Milton at Milton, No. 2, October 7; Melrose at Waltham, 14; Melrose at Melrose, 21; Chelsea; Thanksgiving. BOSTON AMERICANS DOUBLE

The Company Tone of Voice in the Home

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

THE people who destroy their own happiness and the happiness of others by the utter lack of common sense reasoning are not confined to any one kind or class. In every part of the earth are their hands, speaking all tongues, following all creeds, believing in all gods, saints and prayers, yet unable to find or bestow happiness because of that lack of self-control in the daily affairs of life, their lack of delicate consideration for the feelings of others.

In the great metropolis of Boston is the mother who has failed to make her young daughter realize that she is her best friend, who has driven the daughter to seek closer companionship in others, and who then proceeds to blame her daughter for that she is unwilling and unfitted in showing a preference for outside associates.

The daughter accuses the mother of being jealous of her friends, and the breach between them widens day by day. No one can enter the house without feeling the discordant conditions. The mother's friends look with disapproval at the daughter, the daughter's friends regard the mother with severity of judgment.

Away in the far West lives, in a quiet, sleepy town where there is no nervous strain, and no wear and tear of tumultuous life, the story repeats itself. Wherever human beings exist, in what we call civilized society, such family tragedies exist. For they are tragedies despite the small, mean nature of their expression.

It Is a Tragedy

It is a tragedy to miss the happiness which home life offers to us—the only real genuine worth while happiness of earth.

We hear people playing the orphan girl and boy, the childless woman or man; we hear deep expressions of sympathy offered those in whose home some great disaster has occurred through death or test of fortune. Yet oftimes these very men and women are making their homes sadder than any orphan asylum for the children; or these children are owing to lack of proper education of the heart, making their parents tenfold more desolate than the childless parents whom they misunderstand.

The continual discords, quarrelings and disputes which occur in a large percentage of homes all over the "Christian" world are sudden phases of trouble, because they are needless, than the great tragedies which strike here and there now and then.

The surest sorrow of the death of our dearly loved leaves its chastening and uplifting influence, but the unrestrained temper, the petty jealousy, the small selfishness of conduct indulged in daily in many of the best and so-called "happy" homes, are devastating and withering in their effects. It is like the sifting of hot ashes, slowly and continuously, over the rich furniture of a home. It gradually wears away and tarnishes the fine dresses and carvings, and ruins the beautiful draperies and hangings.

I once heard a little girl say that always when she approached her country home she knew by the tone of voices—the voices of her father and mother and brothers—if "company" had come.

The Company Tone

"My folks had a company tone of voice," she said, "and it was much nicer than the voice they used when just we children were there. I always felt a happy sensation when I heard this company voice of my mother, and often I wished I were company that she might speak to me in the same way."

It is the "company tone of voice" which destroys more happiness in life than death or disaster.

Why do we not use our very best manners, our sweetest tones of voice, our most sympathetic, our finest affections, our greatest toleration, our strongest self-control, for the benefit of those with whom we daily associate?

Why is the husband and father more courteous and polite to other men's wives and daughters than to the partner of his own life, the offspring of his own flesh and blood? Why does the wife and mother make a toilet for the guest and say nothing of her evening dress, but wear a tone of conversation for her own family and an excuse for her untidy appearance? Why, in fact, do we become lethargic after that food is the nutritious and of their nearest to those who are really dearer as well as nearer?

Why are so many people making purgatories of their homes, which might be turned into paradise by a little common sense reasoning and self-command?

Why, indeed?

You see the AMERICAN everywhere—in the homes, clubs, restaurants, hotels, cars and boats.

The Girl With the North Pole Stare

By Nell Brinkley

"You simply will stand there and freeze when she hands you that North Pole stare"

The weather perhaps may not be hot
As on Africa's burningest strand
The realm of the Ahlwond of Sleat
Or Sahara's red, blistering sand;
But you'll fancy you're roaming with Cook
In the land of the Walrus and Bear
If perchance you are handed one look
By the girl with the North Pole Stare.

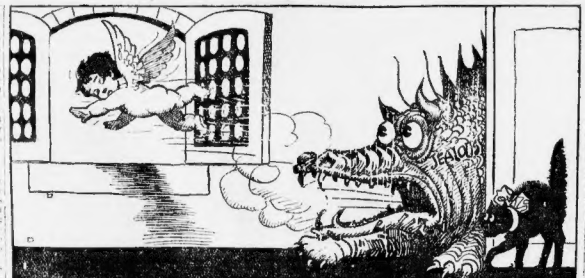
You'll chill when she raises her eyes;
You'll shiver and shudder to view
The frigid and frapped surprise
That they show when she turns them on you.
The sultriest midsummer breeze
May ruffle your Billyesque hair,
But you simply will stand there and freeze
When she gives you that North Pole Stare.

Let Arctic explorers proclaim
That they have been daring and bold
In looking for icebergs and fame
In latitudes laden with cold;
For well do we know that such stunts
Can not for a moment compare
With the man who talks back only once
To the girl with the North Pole Stare.

Jealousy Never Pays

The Most Hopeless Misery in the World Is Wrought by the Green-Eyed Monster

By Dorothy Dix



When Jealousy comes to the door, Love flies out the window.

PERHAPS the most helpless and hopeless misery in the world is wrought by the green-eyed monster. It inflicts a double torture, for it wrecks the happiness equally of the one who suffers it and the victim of it.

There are occasions when the Demon Hum can be fought to a standstill. Temper may be conquered. Nagging may yield to diplomacy. Even unfaithfulness may be combatted, but to fight with jealousy is like battling against an intangible and malignant evil spirit—the seven devils of the Scriptures that you have no power to overcome or exorcise.

Feeds on Envy

Of all passions, jealousy is the most ignoble, the most degrading and the most cruel. It feeds on envy and its drink is revenge. It stoops to the meanest and lowest suspicion, to eavesdropping, to spying and peeping through keyholes, and its unfailing end is defeat, because it slays the very love for which it has descended into the pit.

Whatever form jealousy may take, it is the sign of a mean spirit, a selfish and ego-tistic nature, and a little soul.

Take, for instance, the man who sneers at every other man's success. If he is an artist he ridicules every other artist's pictures. If he is a writer he intimates that the only way that other writers get their stories printed is because they have a pull with some editor. If he is a business man, he charges every other man with being dishonest. What he wants is the centre of the stage and the spot light, but his jealousy defeats itself. He disgusts us so with his envy, and spite, and malice, that we push him as far away into the background as possible.

Then there is the same bootless jealousy between a man and a maid. A man fancies some particular girl and grows green-eyed every time any other man approaches her. He goes off into moody sulks if other people call when he is visiting her, and becomes positively insulting if she dances with another man, or appears to enjoy herself in any company but his.

How this jealousy wins the girl? Never. In a female handwriting; she is forever pinioning to the effect that his wife feels most innocent fun with suspicion, and makes a scene if he is even ordinarily civil to other women, but do such tactics hold a man and fill him with tenderness and love toward his wife?

A thousand times no. Her jealousy is her own undoing, and often brings about the very evil she feared. "You had as well be hung for stealing a sheep as a lamb," is a favorite bit of masculine philosophy, and there is no other recipe so unfailing for making a man notice other women, and yearn for their society, as for his wife to continually nag him with her real or imaginary jealousies.

Another tragedy of domestic life in which the green-eyed monster plays the role of villain is the jealousy that a man exhibits of the affection that his wife feels for her family, or that a wife displays toward her husband's people. The peace of many homes is broken up by the fact that a man goes around like a sore-headed bear whenever his wife's family comes to visit her, or, perhaps, he is even so upset that he forbids her people in his house at all, and a jealous wife separates a man entirely from the mother who bore him, and the sisters and brothers whom he devotedly loves.

Perhaps for the sake of harmony, and because the angered husband or wife is too fine to force an issue on such a point, the situation is accepted without much protest, but the man who has shut the door in the face of the family that his wife loves, or the woman who keeps her husband from going his dear old mother the attention and tenderness that are her due, has laid the axe at the very root of the affection and respect that he, or she, felt for the other.

The woman may have the strength to keep silence, but in her heart a bitter resentment against her husband, and an envy of the woman whose husband has treated her well enough to love and cherish those who are near and dear to her. That is one big love she craves and that she knows that she has not got.

Induces Contempt

The man may say nothing, but he is filled with an undying resentment at a tyranny with which he cannot cope, mingled with a contempt for a woman who is so little and narrow and selfish and so heartless and so cruel that she would take from another woman even the love of her son if she could.

Of course, both men and women justify their jealousy of their wives and husband's families by pleading their own absorbing love, but this unworthy love works out its own retribution, for the things that it causes them to do slay love quicker than any hate could.

The truth is that jealousy is not love. It is nothing but rank egotism and remorseless selfishness, and it is a comfort in a world where justice is not always done as often as it should be, that the green-eyed monster invariably gets all that is coming to him.

Percy the Press Agent on Shopping

BY HANK

"WHY how do you do? Are you going shopping, too? asked the Show Girl, holding out her hand in greeting to Percy as they accidentally met in the front entrance of the Washington street store.

"I'm going to part with enough of my hard-earned cash to connect with some collars, a pair of gloves and a necktie, if that can be called shopping," answered Percy. "What are you going to buy?"

"Oh, said the Show Girl as they passed through the front entrance, "I've got to get a whole lot of things. I really don't know where to begin. First I must get some music which is on the top floor, so let's begin up there."

"Good," gasped the Show Girl as the elevator started upwards. "I hate elevators. They seem to only take part of you with them. The rest of you stays downstairs. If you are going up, and vice versa if the elevator is descending."

"They are a great scientific invention," said Percy. "They were the first things to enlighten an ignorant public to the fact that we possess solar plexuses. I guess perhaps it is right."

"Well, I wish I didn't have one, anyway," said the Show Girl as they arrived at the music counter. "Oh, er, have you got There's No Time Like the Present and the Present Time is Christmas' from the Queen Rat?" she asked the girl clerk.

Wanted to See the Cover

"No'm," came the answer, and the Show Girl shrugged her shoulders petulantly.

"We can get it for you if you wish to leave your order," the clerk continued, but the Show Girl shook her head. "Oh, dear, no, never mind," she replied, "I only wanted it to look at the cover. Somebody told me it had a beautiful picture of one of my favorite actresses on it."

"Where now?" asked Percy as they turned away.

"Why, I want to write half a dozen letters, so let's go to the writing room," said the Show Girl, but when she looked inside she gave a sigh of despair. "Oh all the tables are full," she exclaimed. "Isn't it funny how some people can't write letters at home, but have to come here and take up all the room. Let's go to the glove counter."

"I wish to see some elbow-length white gloves, please," she asked the girl behind the counter, and as the box was put before her she asked: "How much are they?"

"Three dollars and fifty cents a pair," said the clerk.

"What-a!" exclaimed the Show Girl; "why I saw the very same gloves across the street for $2.25.

The Show Girl Gets Angry

"Why such impertinence," cried the Show Girl. "The idea: I shall certainly report you. Why I never in all my life was so insulted. Don't let's stay here another minute," she added to Percy, dragging him away to the photograph album department where she asked for "something nice and well bound for about fifty cents."

"I'm sorry, but we have nothing in a photograph album under sixty cents," said the clerk showing the Show Girl one of them.

"Oh, that looks too cheap," said the Show Girl as she tossed the book aside. "How much is this one?" she asked, picking up an album with a red cover enclosed in gold.

"Two dollars," said the clerk.

"I never saw such an expensive place," snapped the Show Girl, as she moved away.

"Say," said Percy, "you've been in this store for two hours and you haven't bought a thing. If you don't intend to get anything, I do, so come along with me to the men's counter."

"Gimme some collars, size 15½, four; those are fine, wrap 'em up," he said to the clerk. "Now a pair of tan gloves, size 7. They're all right. I'll take 'em. Now a tie, something in black and white. Peach! How much? Two dollars? Put a bag around it. No, that's all."

"Now," said Percy to the Show Girl, as they moved out into the street, "that's the way to go shopping."

"Oh, I wouldn't enjoy myself at all if I did it that way," she replied.

Uncle.

Uncle, whose inventive brains
Kept evolving aeroplanes,
Fell (from an enormous height)
On my garden lawn, last night.
Flying is a fatal sport;
Uncle wrecked the tennis-court.

Mabel.

Mabel's chronic inflammation
Led at length to amputation.
Oh, her cries were loud and deep!
I could scarcely get to sleep.

Inconvenance.

I collided with some trippers,
In my swift De Dion Bouton;
Squeezed them out as flat as kippers.
Left them "quest mort que mouton."
What a nuisance trippers are!
I must now repaint the car.

Wrath.

Who was on a trip abroad,
When I heard she'd died of cramp.

The SUNDAY AMERICAN is the Seventh Day Wonder of New England.

To-day's Best Story

When Mr. Taft was passing through South Carolina, on his way to Charleston to sail for Panama, a little girl handed him from the rear of his train a bouquet of violets. She had fastened a card to the stems on which was written her name—Josephine Bass.

"Is that your name?" asked the President.

"Yeth," lisped the child.

"Your violets are very sweet, Josephine, and I would like to do something for you. Tell me what you would like."

The little girl hung her head and put her fingers in her mouth reflectively; then, with a bright smile, she said:

"I would like you to send me a souvenir postal when you get to the Canal."

The postal card was duly mailed, and it is doubtful if the little recipient had any more pleasure in the transaction than was felt by the President-elect when he directed the illustrated bit of pasteboard to "Miss Josephine Bass," his little correspondent in South Carolina, and knew that her wish would be gratified.

How are Campbell's Soups so good at the price?

Because price is the last thing we think of. We make Campbell's Soups as good as soups can be made regardless of price. And this quality creates our extremely large output which makes it possible for us to buy and operate with perfect system and economy. That's the secret of

Campbell's Soups

Our patent machinery fills, seals and labels 30,000 cans of soup in an hour. And we have put up more than 300,000 cans of Campbell's Soups in a day.

SOCIETY

Country Parties On Fall Program

By ELIZABETH ELLIOTT.

Socially speaking there are but three times for conversation these Autumn days—before, dehorning and the wanderings of the fashionables. For there are those who remain at home and the day of the debutante is some little distance away naturally the most absorbing pastime is the meeting of the various members of the smart set. Informal visits are a feature of the late season and the country house party, where a few congenial souls are gathered for a few weeks of rest and mild recreation before the real season in town begins, is the most popular of all hospitable fads.

Mrs. Francis Vernon Lloyd of Philadelphia, who has just completed a delightful season at Bar Harbor, is a member of the house party being entertained by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Lowell, at their Chestnut Hill country place, and Mrs. Lowell will not return to their Commonwealth avenue residence until after Thanksgiving.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sumner Hamlin of Raleigh street, who are at present at their Martinsdale country seat, are entertaining, among other guests, Mrs. William Gorham Rice and her son, William Gorham Rice, Jr., who is at Albany, and who will later going for a visit with Mrs. Hamlin's brother, Mrs. John V. L. Pruyn, at her estate nearby.

Dr. and Mrs. Arnold C. Rigg, who have just closed their handsome Summer cottage at Dark Harbor, are the guests of the latter's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Charles Mc-Burney at "Cherry Hill," their home in Stockbridge. The McBurneys were also at Lakewood the past season.

Miss Fanny Dwight, around whom so much interest centers, is present on account of the recent announcement of the engagement to Grenville Clark, is the guest of Mrs. Henry M. Field at Stockbridge.

Most notable among the North Shore visitors are Congressman and Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, who are the house guests of Mr. Longworth's mother at her Pride's Crossing villa.

The group of all the fashionables in Lenox and Stockbridge yesterday after noon was the large reception which was given at Cranbrook by Mrs. John S. Barnes in compliment to her daughter, Mrs. S. Warren Sturgis of Boston. Mr. Sturgis and Mrs. Sturgis were assisted in receiving by the Misses Georgiana and Winifred Barnes. In the course of the afternoon many of the guests were entertained through the beautiful gardens of the estate.

Among those who motored were Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, Mrs. S. Parkman Shaw, Miss Alice Shaw, Edwin D. Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. George Westinghouse, Richard Goodhue, Mrs. Moses Goodman, Mrs. John E. Alexandre, Miss Helen Alexandre, Miss Anna U. Shaw, Miss Georgina Sargent, Miss Helen Parish, Mrs. Joseph Barden, Mrs. Richard Starr Dana, Mrs. Henry Bellows Hall, Miss Harriet Woodworth, Mrs. Robert W. Paterson, Mrs. Francis V. Balch, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Bradford, Mrs. Lindsay Fairfax, Mr. Frederick L. Ingersoll, Mr. Charles Verpell Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Chester French, Miss Margaret Daly Vaux, Miss Clementina and Sophie Furniss, Mr. David Lodge, Mrs. Montgomery Sturgis, Mr. Robert Winthrop, Mrs. Frank S. Sturgis, Countess de Grunne, Miss Constance Forbes and Miss Helene Meyer.

Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and her daughter, Mrs. Maud Howe Elliott, have gone from Newport, where they have been spending the Summer, to Bedford, New York, to visit Mr. and Mrs. Laurence Hoyt. They started yesterday after noon. Boston hostesses will be delighted to know that on September 27 Mrs. Howe will be in town for the reception to be given at the Metropolitan Opera House in commemoration of the centenary of suffragette movement. Although Mrs. Howe seldom makes a public appearance, she is considered quite an old time suffragette and appears to be optimistic both and expects to be able to carry out her interesting undertaking. Mrs. Howe's own home is ninety-first year.

Mrs. Robert Winthrop, Mrs. Frank S. Sturgis, Mrs. Henry Parkman, Miss Sarah de Grasse, Mrs. Harris Fahnestock, Miss Helen Parkman, Miss Georgiana Bond, Miss Nancy Johnson and Miss Marie de Peyster Carey were the guests at a luncheon given by Mrs. James J. Lindley at her villa in Lenox yesterday. Mrs. Lindley is the widow of Col. Philip Sheridan.

Mr. and Mrs. Amory Morse of Mount Touge in Dunters, have gone to Long Island. They motored on from Newport City yesterday for a visit in New York.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Hollister Pease gave a dinner for Edwin C. Morgan at their place, the Orchard, in Lenox, last evening. Among those guests were Mr. and Mrs. Richard C. Dixey, Miss Rosamund Dixey, Mr. and Mrs. George Westinghouse, Mr. and Mrs. Harris Fahnestock and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Adee Boardman.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Choate, Jr., and Lord Cloud Hamilton are to have been with Mr. and Mrs. Joseph H. Choate in Stockbridge, went to New York yesterday, where they will attend the Hudson Fulton celebration. Mr. Choate is a New York native in the week for the same purpose.

Mr. and Mrs. George Davenport and Miss Dorothea Davenport are to remain at their country home in Cohasset quite late this season and are not expected at their town house on Beacon street before October 25.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Campbell of Cambridge, who recently entertained Mr. Campbell's parents, Sir Francis and Lady Campbell of London, are at Santa Dunlary, with their family for the Autumn.

Professor and Mrs. Thaddeus Strong have returned from abroad and are at Hemenway Chambers.

BRILLIANT NEW PLAYS OPEN RUNS AT BOSTON THEATRES

When former President Roosevelt was and night for the cause. Finally they came to bear each other.

Tyrrell is the hero of the police and his death is decreed. Vassili, driven to bay, watch means death to him as well as the girl. Anton Arno is the villain of the piece. In this exhibit was Tyrrell driven from the opera house, and at the critical moment, tries to draw back from the task, then he himself again. Anton gives the signal, the bomb is tossed. The curtain falls—Liberty!" The play ends.

Miss Hodgetz Reicher, one of the leading actresses of Germany, makes her first appearance in English, speaking role. Her pronounced is essentially womanly, simple and charming.

Frank Keenan, one of the most painstaking actors on the American stage in the Templet. Frederick Lewis is the truest heart and sincerest friend. Edward Arnold, as part of Anton, stands out in the cast for his splendid character study and the controlled feeling.

"On the Eve" is well worth seeing.

Majestic.

William Faversham and an able supporting company produced at the Majestic Theatre last night a strong drama. "The World and His Wife," written by Leo Ditchstein and translated from the Spanish by Charles Frederick Stedlinger. The large audience was thoroughly appreciative of this high class play and the artistic manner in which it was staged and rendered. Mr. Faversham had presented the same play when it was produced in February and 1907, as reception was at that time so favorable that he placed it on his regular repertoire for this year. The leading part, Mr. Faversham's, is one peculiarly suited to his ability. As the play progresses he reveals about others tales were woven out of souls which he made a particularly strong impression upon his audience and after each act he received long and hearty applause. At the conclusion of the second act Mr. Faversham was forced to answer several curtain calls and finally made a short speech. Miss Julia Opp played the part of the leading woman in a thoroughly capable manner. All of the other members of the company were given ample opportunity to display their ability.

Keith's.

Believers in the Darwinian theory should go to Keith's this week by the first second and twice in the antics of Peter, the almost human monkey, who is performing therein. Peter is a clever little fellow, with big eyes, prosperly fed, would end the war between the people of Europe, and open, or yellow, could stand before them. Put on a dozen of things in an instant and let them grace over London or Berlin, and Peter, the Kaiser would have things up their minds.

But Peter's mission at Keith's this week is not to terrorize, but to amuse. That he succeeds in doing this is amply demonstrated by the scrutiny of delight which greet his every antic.

Frederick Ardine Lawyer," as impersonated by Will M. Cressey and Miss Dayne, is another delightful act. Keating Hamilton, while he maintains sharpshooting of the highest order, makes the audience stare in wonder.

Sievers, Walters and Crooker, as the three Rikes, gives a delicious flavor of Germany. Joe Welch is also in the juggling of the Carnes of Australia wins considerable favor from the audience. The bill is rounded out by the fine work of Fred King's players, Oscar Lorraine, a gifted violinist, and a splendid series of motion pictures.

Castle Square.

Both audiences at the Castle Square Theatre were delighted with the two performances of "The Spoilers," a drama adapted from Rex Beach's novel by Rex Beach and James Montgomery, which is being presented there this week by John Craig and his stock company. The play is full from start to finish of surprise and dramatic episode in the history of Alaska. The stage settings are excellent and the ending gives one a glimpse of the most horrible sort made of the burning of the entire east was excellent, Miss Craig was thoroughly at home in the role of the young miner. Messrs. Prieins, Hanley and Bonners were typical of the life and character they portrayed. Mr. Meek as Alexander McNamara, the "Spoilers" lawyer, while the Misses Young, Bixley and Cromwell ably represented the feminine interest.

Colonial.

"The Chorus Lady" is with us again, Miss Rose Stahl, the real, only and original purveyor of the type, came back to Boston yesterday at the Colonial Theatre last night.

Miss Stahl herself is better than ever, if such a thing is possible, in the role of the chorus lady. The portrayal natures to her, of course. She doesn't grown tired of it. The green room thing, the pilgrimage from agent to agent and that's just what Miss Stahl does in the course of the play, with Charlotte Hunt and Frederick von Rossaeller in the leading roles.

Boston.

"The Gay Parisian" began last night their third week at the Boston Theatre. Among the many charms of the piece are the Hungarian music, the fine work of Terry Florence Reid, Anna Boyce and Harry Fairleigh and the songs and comicalities of Bobby North.

Globe.

"Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" is drawing heavily in its second and final week at the Globe Theatre. Helen Weathersby scores as Mrs. Wiggs. Beginning Monday there will be a two weeks' engagement of the Globe of "The Lion and the Mouse," the financial-political drama by Charles Klein.

Bowdoin Square.

At the North Pole" at the Bowdoin Square Theatre is pertinent. Eskimo girls represented by some members of the stock company are an interesting feature. A dramatic romance of the frozen North is told in the play, with Charlotte Hunt and Frederick von Rossaeller in the leading roles.

Advice to the Lovelorn

AN ELOPEMENT WITHOUT DOUBT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am one of your great devotees, and on the following account, and would be very much obliged if you would give your opinion.

A friend of mine is keeping company with a young man for a number of years, and the parents of the girl were strongly opposed to the match, and in the various arguments she often hinted that she would marry without their consent, to end it all, which she was almost mentioning a word before leaving the house, but never her escape that day she confessed Sunday, the wager is, Would you consider it an elopement or not?

ANXIOUS.

I MOST certainly should call it an elopement. The elopement consists in going and getting married without her parents' consent. Confession does not change the fact that it was an elopement.

CALL ON HER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am twenty-two years of age and keep company with a young lady whom I love very dearly. We had a misunderstanding, and, being deprived of her company for four days, I have been away from home about six months.

During this time I have written six or seven letters to the young lady, but have never received but one personal, on which she merely signed her name.

A young man in my home town said he would live or die for the young lady, and in the various arguments she often hinted that she would marry without their consent, to end it all, which she was almost mentioning a word before leaving the house, but never her escape that day she confessed Sunday, the wager is, Would you consider it an elopement or not?

M[illegible], who was reaching through the window and was just about beside me, now turned up. At a gesture from Rouletabille he stood rooted to the spot, an impossible position for any one to assume and gain sufficient power to release himself in the very act, at least, to avoid the results of the fall. He is seemed bent to the ground as used to climb trees in the abandoning spaces, and, more worried behind him, our fourth enemy Ivan, who arrived out, all on the same time he is clinging to the dark and those two minutes against something which we does not see.

We recognized the figure from which the shriek had come and when we had passed the inside of the enemy we found the body. The poor girl was quite dead, from some cause, unknown to the unlearned. It was Bernier Bernier in whose breast sounded the desire rattle who was crying in vain for help and who was now the prey of the fire. It was Bernier from whose breast burned a shriek of blood. Bernier over whom we leaned and who, with one look, had recognized unfeigned strength [illegible] Bernier was not again, was [illegible] Bernier, Frederic Larsan! Frederic Larsan! He was with one look, and movement, at he very instant that the very rang out so cruelly that we had almost seen the shape of death given. And next were the shapes, there had not even been a shadow before our eyes—nothing but the fire.

We passed, moved by the same sentiment, to the other side of the room. There, on the floor of which still stood open we entered in a moment the room of Rouletabille. The injured man was the only one who knew how a woman was [illegible] Bernier. Both were [illegible] and [illegible] Bernier. But when the wife of the dead concierge saw our [illegible] of the affright as though smitten by the knowledge of some [illegible] she fell to the floor like a [illegible] of fainting and went straight, as [illegible] to our house hidden. Rouletabille to the place where the body was [illegible].

And now it was her groans that sounded [illegible] with the noise of the Mail, over the bleeding corpse. We tore [illegible] from the face of the beauty and found a gaping wound just above the heart. [illegible] body of the girl. There was [illegible] which I had seen at the slaughter [illegible] of the Jewish rites, and [illegible] of the inexplicable body.

"Look, look!" I said. It was the same stroke of the knife," he said. "It is the knife!" [illegible] But where is the knife?

We looked for the weapon everywhere without finding it. The man who had struck the blow had carried the knife away with him. But why had he struck her? What could not know. Bernier had been killed because he knew too much, because of that knowledge that the life of [illegible] was [illegible] Bernier had [illegible] the last words of the dying [illegible] to Frederic Larsan.

Suddenly on the threshold of the room [illegible] appeared, [illegible] in his hand. He was reading as he [illegible] and [illegible] his face was a [illegible] that Miss Edith [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] his hands, pointed to the corpse and cried out:

"A man [illegible] murdered! Send for the police!"

The Prince said at the best and then [illegible] a moment [illegible] a word and then uttered hastily some [illegible] that he would send for the police. Frederic Larsan Bernier [illegible] as we left [illegible] Rouletabille stated himself on the edge of the [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] all its strength. He spoke to Miss Edith in a low tone.

"Let the police come then, Madame, but especially do not touch [illegible] indicted upon it."

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

JORDAN STORE SHOWING NEW DRESS STYLES

A woman appearing in full evening costume, a remarkable creation of the modiste's art, attracted a great deal of attention today. It was a model in the window of the Jordan Marsh company store. Sphinx jade, the new shade originating with Bernard in Paris, was the material of which the gown was fashioned, and a contrasting sash and girdle of amber crepe de chine stood out against the indoor background. This costume attracted many women to the display on the second floor, where more equally striking creations were in evidence.

Among these a gown by Drecoll, in blue silk crepe, was notable for being a complete spiral, beginning at the neck and ending in the train, giving a novel corkscrew effect.

Equally noteworthy in the rest and wrap department was a tuxedo coat of Marie Antoinette, by Maurice Myer, of crepe de chine, on an original design, upon the left arm of which is embroidered the "bull moose." The carriage wear department, consisting of coat, skirt and cape to match has been fashionable.

It is at night that the debutante will appear in starring. She will like Redfilling Hood, worn a long cape, at the top of which is a cowl or hood, which may be worn in three different ways.

Here also is featured the latest idea in French millinery, where the favorite shape at present is the turban. Tailored effects, with short feathers to add variety, will also be in vogue for street wear, while the new Dutch polo is gaining prominence for automobile use.

The Jordan Marsh Company is also showing many other things in the Grand Opening, among which may be discerned new styles for men. New shades are to be seen in neckwear, stockings and pajamas. The rest of men's regalia remains much the same as ever.

NEW JURORS CALLED FOR IN STEEL CASES

With but eleven of the twelve jurors who are to try the 33 defendants in the assembled steel cases selected, and these subject to challenge by either side, the panel of 60 men having been exhausted, Judge Harris immediately ordered several deputy sheriffs to go out on the streets about the court house and pick up men to serve as possible jurors.

Eleven men were seated in the jury box when Judge Harris ordered the recess. When yesterday afternoon the work of selecting the jury began, the box has been full several times. The method of procedure has been to fill the jury box and then allow either side to challenge.

Each of the defendants is allowed two peremptory challenges. This makes a total of 66. The government is allowed a like number. So far the government has used 9 of these and the defence 10. The rest of the jurors were either excused for having formed an opinion or because of prejudice.

One man, Henry M. Nourse, an architect, was excused because he had business dealings with one of the corporations on trial.

Tuesday Attorney Henry F. Burlburt has acted as spokesman for the big array of legal talent. So far twenty-eight different lawyers have appeared and taken part in the case.

Dr. Minot J. Savage Quits Pulpit Forever.

LONDON—Dr. Minot Judson Savage, before leaving here for New York yesterday, announced his permanent retirement from the pulpit. To a few friends gathered to see him off he said:

"I am out of pulpit and public life. Hereafter I will devote my entire time to writing." It is understood that Dr. Savage does not purpose to divert his literary talents from his accustomed channels, but will devote his whole time to work in connection with the Unitarian cause. For two years Dr. Savage has been suffering a nervous breakdown. Long and careful treatment and extended rest have largely restored his health and vigor. When seen in London he seemed to be in good spirits and suffered in no way from indisposition.

Rougier in Highest Flight.

BRESCIA—Rougier, the aviator, broke all records for high flights when he reached a height of 1,640 feet. Rougier's feat will beat Orville Wright's record made in Berlin. Lieutenant Calderara had luck at Rougier's heels. He started a flight in a Wright biplane, but was forced to descend when it fell. Calderara was not hurt, but the machine was badly damaged. The Brescia aviation meet is the most important in the United States.

Not to Wed Lord Falconer.

PARIS—Although Mrs. Chapman, the wealthy widow of a former New York merchant, will make no statement as coming directly from her, there is no truth whatever in the report of her engagement to Lord Falconer. Lord Kintore and his family have been very kind to Mrs. Chapman at Aix-les-Bains. This fact probably suggested the story.

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

A market of records in fact and a Morgan market in supposition. Morgan is believed to be predominately the factor in the campaign. He is given credit for having taken charge of the money situation in a way that made a strengthening of the reserves possible on Saturday.

It was this statement which started stocks buoyantly. The faith in Morgan is such that notwithstanding the drain of account in Germany, higher rates here are looked for only as a result of the fall in the bearish situation, which leaves the field perfectly clear for a rushing rise.

$ $ $

Professionals working for the reaction shifted desperately to make it appear that the statement was in very large part accomplished this by leaving out of consideration the $40,000,000 gold deposit which the National Bank of Business ran up in a night at the other banks of the city to the detriment of their reserves. Persons in close touch with the money situation believe that this position will be maintained by the strong banks by any attempt of the European banks to bring gold here to check the upward movement of prices. The Imperial Bank of Germany is said to be in no position to get gold money in New York did not advance above 4 per cent.

Exchange of commodities among the different countries has come but at its maximum in several years, and the end is not yet in sight. But with the return of prosperity and the demand for power there is no doubt that the coming year will show that of earlier records.

The recovery of trade in foreign trade since the panic of 1907 is the comparatively slow one. The United States has not yet gathered its full strength. Now that recovery is under way in Europe, the demand for imports to the United States. It is noted that the increase in the value of foreign trade will be more than made good on the larger basis of international trade.

The greater percentage of the large industrial companies are now operating their plants to a full normal. Before the close of the year, it is said, the majority of them will be running on full time, and there will be few idle mills or factories in the United States.

New orders of many of the industrial companies are coming in so fast that even the improvements in business started last April guarantee steady operations until the latter part of the year. Railroad earnings show a disposition to remain out of the market in the near future.

U. S. Rubber common and first preferred have advanced sharply, the latter closing at a sensational gain of 5 points. Reports are circulating that a dividend will be paid on the common in October. As the present movement in the rubber stocks was originated by the confidence of those in control of a direct statement that a dividend would be forthcoming in the near future, it is not unlikely to be declared if the stock is to retain its present strength. Reliable persons say that it is earning at least 5 per cent., and the average 20 cents per share on the stock of the Square Deal the stock buying pool, which have nothing to do with the shares, Mo., Kas. & Tex. .....

MYSTERY IN DEATH OF ROXBURY MAN

The police of the Roxbury district are trying to solve the mysterious death early today of William H. Kennedy, single, forty-five years old, of No. 35 Rockland place, Roxbury. Kennedy was found dead at 9:13 in an alleyway at the rear of No. 1,053 Columbus avenue. The police say that Kennedy, with several friends, had been out last night, and that they had been drinking. The men went to rote in the engine house in Ward 18, back of the Roxbury District Courthouse. After this the police are told the men went to the rear of No. 1,053 Columbus avenue, and there the others left Kennedy. When they went back for Kennedy he was dead.

NATIONAL BOARD TO DISCUSS STRIKE

The question as to whether a strike shall be ordered on all the contracts of Woodbury & Leighton, building contractors of this city, unless a settlement is made with the seventy-five carpenters who left work at the Allston garage yesterday, is to be considered by the National Building Trades Department's executive committee at Tampa, Fla., in a few days. The carpenters' case by their representative was forcibly injected from the office of Woodbury & Leighton while trying to have a hearing on the grievances of the men over union wages.

READING HITS NEW HIGH MARK

NEW YORK, Sept. 21.—Wall Street insisted to-day on believing that Reading would either increase its dividend to 8 per cent. or make a distribution of some kind to stockholders out of its concealed assets. As a result the stock, after declining half a point at the opening, advanced in a spectacular manner to the new high record of 173¾, a gain of 2¾ points.

There was some realizing in Union Pacific at the opening, but the strength of the others, Reading and Steel, had a cheering effect on it and caused it to advance to 207, a net gain of 1 point.

Steel Shares Strong.

Steel shares were strong and advanced fractionally because of the returns of Judge Gary, chairman of the board, and publication of optimistic views by him. St. Paul was heavy at the beginning of trading, but later improved with the rest of the list.

Under leadership of the Rubber shares, the final movement of stocks carried them to quite a broadened active market. National Biscuit preferred, which sold nearly a point, National Biscuit 1¼ points and International Paper over a point.

Reading Trading Quiet.

Trading in American shares in London was quiet, with Southern Pacific the leader.

An advance of nearly a point in Nipissing to 9 was accompanied with heavy trading, characterized the opening of the session on the N. Y. Curb market. This advance was followed by the announcement of the regular quarterly dividend of 5 per cent., and an extra dividend of 2½ per cent., thus putting the stock on a yearly dividend basis of 30 per cent., which is controlled by the same group of men. Interest was also aroused in the subway spread at 9 and showed no disposition to rally.

MINING LIST IS IRREGULAR

STATE STREET, Sept. 21.—Mining shares were somewhat irregular this forenoon, although there were no weak spots. Quite the contrary there were strong features and the tone was good throughout the forenoon trading.

Nipissing was the feature at the opening at 9, a full point rise over night. This was due to an increase in the dividend rate which puts the stock on a 30 per cent. basis. The directors have declared a quarterly dividend of 5 per cent. and 2½ per cent. extra.

U. S. Smelting advanced a point to 59 and the pool in this stock is working for higher prices. La Rose was also strong with a ¾ point advance to 16 on expectations of early coal shipments.

Curb trading was brisk and active, although the advances were in specialties.

First National was particularly active and the price rose to 7. Chino on a good demand rose to 39 5-8. Davis Daly 2½ suffered to close to 7, and La Rose was firm around 8. Such a condition is not in First National, and the fight for control of Davis Daly is evidently a battle royal, the chief stumbling block in La Rose being the dividend.

A New Way to Carry an Election District

¶ Just carry it off—or rather, carry off all the people in it.

¶ That's what Kelvin did when he ran for the Presidency. And, as it happened, the people were very glad to be carried.

¶ George Randolph Chester (of "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" fame, you know) in one of his tremendous "Cash Intrigue" stories describes this unique campaign.

The World Progresses

And Very Small Things Prove the Progress

Copyright, 1909, by American-Journal-Examiner

When you read your newspaper every day and see the long list of murders, in big type often, read of dishonesty in office, you are apt to take a rather gloomy view of civilization and the future.

But in every newspaper, every day, you may find, if you look for it, some small, insignificant piece of news—and that small item, analyzed, supplies hope and optimism enough to counteract all of the crimes of the little criminals in the gutter and the big criminals in the banks and public offices.

Did you notice the other day the funeral details of the simple-minded citizen who wanted the family portraits burned with his body?

He gave orders, and, as he left money with the orders, the orders were obeyed.

The family portraits were taken down from the walls, certain valued trifles were moved with the pictures. These were burned with his body, and all the ashes were buried together.

Foolish and wasteful, you will say, and so it was. But it was a condensed story of progress.

If that man had lived in India a few years ago, instead of wanting a family portrait burned with his body, HE WOULD HAVE WANTED HIS WIFE BURNED ALIVE WITH HIS OWN DEAD CARCASS!

If he had been one of the primitive savage rulers of this earth he would have had, perhaps, hundreds of human beings slaughtered and thrown into the grave with him, that he might have slaves in another world.

Even in recent times such a man would have spent uselessly on his own death enormous sums needed by the living.

His poor, feeble, little barbarism, that demanded only the burning of a few old pictures, utterly useless, proves progress, proves that the good in men is gradually growing, and what is bad is dying away.

Wherever you look in the world you will find progress if you want to see it.

Every insane asylum was once a dreadful institution of torture. Miserable men and women were beaten, chained, starved, flooded with cold water, until they sank exhausted.

What wonderful progress there is in the present kind treatment of maniacs! And what a change in prisons! No more lockstep, no more lashing of the men or brutal punishment to make the young criminal a criminal forever.

Even in the treatment of children there has been growth in decency. The man or woman that beats a child is looked upon with contempt by all neighbors that are not hopelessly ignorant. The man who a few years ago would thrash his own young boy, AND FORBID YOU TO THRASH HIS BULLDOG FOR FEAR OF BREAKING THE DOG'S SPIRIT, now realizes that the BOY ALSO HAS A SPIRIT THAT CAN BE BROKEN.

When you read the news, look at it from both sides. See the bad side, remember that you and other men that think have got to do your share of work to make things better in the next twenty years, as others made them better in the past twenty.

But while you see clearly the wrong that is done, look also for the hopeful side and find it.

Optimism and hope create a force greater than the force of indignation or of hatred.

A Rousing Word for Postal Savings Banks

The President devoted his principal address in Milwaukee to the subject of postal savings banks.

He put the case on solid ground in saying that, while he was not in favor of having the government do anything that private citizens can do as well or better, "in this particular savings bank business the government is especially fitted to do what no system of private bankers can do."

He said that a great many people "are just wavering in the balance as to whether to save their money or not—because they do not know where they can put it in safety." And that the postal savings bank would furnish a great encouragement to thrift, since it would give assurance of absolute security.

The President's statement that Americans living near the Canadian border in the Northwest are accustomed to go over the line to MAKE DEPOSITS IN THE POST OFFICE BANKS OF CANADA carried a convincing argument.

If Mr. Taft's position in this matter has a weakness it is the weakness of the Republican platform on which he stands.

While he was speaking in Milwaukee the convention of the American Bankers' Association in Chicago was straining its powers of language in framing and passing a resolution to condemn his postal savings bank plans.

The self-interested opposition of the bankers is, no doubt, a thing to be expected. But the force of their argument against post office banking would be broken if its advocacy were pushed along the lines marked out by the platform of the Independence League.

The resolution of the bankers' convention emphasized the danger to the nation's credit that might accrue if a huge bonded indebtedness were created in order to absorb the postal savings bank deposits.

The Independence party, in its Chicago platform of last year, met this difficulty by insisting that postal bank deposits should "BE LOANED TO THE PEOPLE IN THE LOCALITY OF THE SEVERAL POSTAL BANKS, AND AT A RATE OF INTEREST TO BE FIXED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

LETTERS FROM AMERICAN READERS

PROTECT CONSTITUTION

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Recently I read in the BOSTON AMERICAN where someone, presumably through ignorance, had used our national flag as a floor mop, and that the government was to investigate the case and punish the guilty one, if found, whether he be ignorant of the law or not. The incident recalled to my mind what treatment, according to Mr. Harold Bolce in the Cosmopolitan Magazine, our constitution is receiving at the hands of so many of the professors in our colleges. There is something in this that I cannot understand, and I am sure that to most of your readers it is a mystery also. Will you not be good enough to explain to us why it is that so many of our professors are allowed to poison the minds of their students against our republican form of government with impunity? Or, even ignorance is to be punished simply having misused the flag, ought those professors to be, at least, reprimanded for trampling the constitution under foot, as they are doing?

Should our national colors be dearer to our hearts than are our principles of liberty and equality of which those colors are only an emblem after all? Our President, in taking the oath of office, swears to preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.

Will you please tell us also what the President is expected to protect and defend the constitution against; and for whom and from what should he preserve it?

Haverhill, Mass. E. ARPIN.

ELBERT HUBBARD'S ARTICLE —ON— A NEW OCCUPATION

Especially Written for the American

By ELBERT HUBBARD

Copyright, 1909, by American-Journal-Examiner

FOR two hundred years the destruction of trees was the chief intent of man in America. And so recklessly and completely did axe and torch do their work that in certain sections millions of acres have been rendered uninhabitable.

These waste places are called, with fitting phrase, "slashings."

The entire racial instinct has been one of enmity, or at least indifference, toward the tree.

I can well remember when men and boys would cut down some mighty oak, or beautiful black walnut tree, that had been over two hundred years in growing, just to catch an innocent possum that had taken refuge in its branches.

It is a great man who can introduce us to the divinities that surround us, and make us realize our sacred relationships. I met such a man some time ago.

His life and work appealed to me so that I grew suspicious of myself and refused to write of him until I knew him better.

This man is John Davey. He is sixty years old, but looks forty, and at times acts twenty.

John Davey is the Tree Man, or the Tree Doctor, or the Father of Tree Surgery. I like to call him the Tree's Brother. He doctors trees, and he has several hundred athletic, husky boys helping him. No man I ever saw so mixed in with the elements—no man I ever knew was so blended with the leaves—no man I ever knew possessed such a sympathy for waving, swaying saplings as this man. His life is all bound up in trees and the birds that live in their branches.

Some Things That Grown-ups Don't Know.

John Davey does not remember a time when he was not familiar with trees. He was born in England, of parents well-to-do, of the middle class. His father was a farmer, with a taste for botany and tree culture.

And there are some things which his father taught John Davey—things which many grown-ups do not yet know.

He discovered that many trees, especially along highways, were wounded by horses gnawing them or wagons running against them. And in such cases nature would put forth a strong effort to cover over the wounded places with bark. Often she would succeed, and sometimes it would happen that the bark would partially grow over a defective place and leave a spot of decay on the inside of the tree. The water would then gather there and the decay would increase until the tree would become hollow at the core. A hollow tree is always a weak tree, and when the storms come such are often laid low.

About thirty years ago Davey discovered that if you could thoroughly clean out a decayed spot, fill the cavity with cement and cap it over so as to keep out the wet, the tree would recover completely from the wound and often heal over the scar.

Gives Trees New Lease of Life.

John Davey takes the tree which you can't spare—the old landmark, which the deeds are drawn from—the tree that has watched over the destinies of two or three or perhaps half a dozen generations—and by a thorough, loving and skilled treatment gives it a new lease of life.

Up on the Roycroft Farm we had a butternut tree that stood out alone in the field. Uncle Billy Bushnell, now over eighty years of age, told me that he used to pick butternuts off that tree in his boyhood. And while Uncle Billy at times mistakes his imagination for memory, in his case there is no doubt that he tells the truth. He can remember how for over seventy years boys would climb that tree for nuts. But for the past ten years there were many dead branches in the old butternut. We thought it was dying; and it really became an unsightly and pathetic figure. So one day I told one of the boys to go and get the cross-cut saw and cut the tree down.

He couldn't find the saw, and the next day Al Bahn sent the young fellow to work in the bindery. So the tree was saved, which shows the beauty of not always carrying the message to Garcia, and doing a thing when you are told.

It was only a week after that that John Davey came along. He was looking at our trees. His eye fell on the old butternut, with its appealing dead branches.

"Let me try my hand on that one," he asked.

We knew he could not do it—he knew he could.

We let him have his way. His first move was to send two Daveyites up into that tree with orders to cut out all the dead limbs.

When this was done we saw there was really considerable of green left. It took nearly a thousand pounds of cement and three square yards of zinc. But the tree, as if grateful for being relieved of the great mass of dead matter, is sending forth great clusters of green twigs and new branches.
